In moving the resolution, Mr. Lewis lisayowed any separationist tendency. There should be a representa-tive of Canada to act in a constant advisory capacity with the British Embassy, since practically seven-tenths of the business of the British Embassy at Washington pertained to matters concerning Canada, The British Ambassador, who had not lived in Canada, could naturally know but comparatively little of conditions and view-points here, and Canada should, herself, be in the best position to conduct her own business with her great trade neighbor. The matters affecting the waterways and international boundary were already in process of satisfactory adjustment by the joint representatives of Canada and the United States, and he believed that a similar course should be followed with all other matters affecting the two countries. Sir Wilfrid Laurier agreed that the affairs, of the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race should be conducted in a cordial and harmonious spirit. He was glad to say that the relations between the United States and Great Britain had never been so friendly as at present. 1 "While some good might arise from our having a representative to advise with the British Ambassador at Wash-Corkery Went Overboard at Indianington, still his presence might also give rise to complications.
