She Finally Listened.

By RUTH CAMERON.

A letter friend of mine, a man who frankly admits himself uneducated (and with good reason) a right to consideration as a man who is constantly trying to think things out, sends me this interesting little description of one of his experiences:

"I was talking to a very well educated woman not long ago and for a long time she did not really take in anything I said simply because she thought she knew more about everything than I did because I was not educated."

He had to tire her out. "She would just wait for an opportunity to rebut what I said and really did not sense the meaning of half I said. But I saw if I kept at it until I tired her out so she did not try to think of anything to say, then she would hear me. Pretty soon she said, 'You have some good arguments if you would have someone to put them in more of an educated language.' I then told her that all I had been saying was as plain to understand as those she had just caught on to, only she had not heard anything I said before."

I love that—as the society people used to say. Don't you?

It is such an accurate description of the way so many people converse. The idea that they might listen as well as talk seems never to enter their heads.

More Than Patient Waiting For A Chance To Speak.

By listening, you understand. I mean much more than just keeping still. Something more than patient waiting for the other person to stop talking so that one may have one's chance to speak again. Something more receptive than watching for a chance to rebut what the other person says, or waiting for a cue to seize the floor and bring out one's own anecdotes.

There are many people in the world who never listen in the full sense of the word. And there are still more of us who only pay that tribute occasionally.

The wisest men would listen. And what a lot we miss! How surely we condemn ourselves to narrow mindedness. Human experience varies so widely that there are some things the most ignorant man in the world could tell the wisest, if he would listen. And he unquestionably would, else he would never have become the wisest man.

It seems so strange that we should all be eager to talk about our own points of view, our own experiences, etc., when these are an old story to us. Why aren't we eager to hear the new story of the other man's experience, the other man's point of view?

Your Boys and Girls.

The great need is that mothers should have the whole confidence of their children. At school the child, in due time, should learn the fundamental facts of life from elementary biology, and at home the mother should, on suitable occasions, frankly explain to the child its relationship to its parents and she should surround that explanation with the strongest sentiment of love and respect.

Surely parents cannot believe that the children learn nothing of these things on the street or among their playmates. It cannot be affirmed too frequently that the only way to ensure a clean and healthy mind in a child is through the complete frankness of the mother.

To-Day's Tabloid Tale.

AND WOMAN WAITS.

The honeymoon was over, and it was their first morning in their new home, their cozy little nest on Steenth Street which, if it had been two blocks further west, would have faced the park—and, though they were naturally kind hearted young people, they couldn't help wishing that some day a fire would burn down the two rows of houses between them and the view, although of course they hoped that the firemen would rescue all the people first.

Anyway, it was their first morning in their new home, and at the very thought of his leaving her, she came to him desperate!

"Tom, Tom!" she breathed. "It's our first morning in our new home—don't let me go away!"

He patted her hair, and his faithful brown eyes filled with tears.

"I must, I must," he breathed back. "You know I wouldn't leave you unless I heard the stern hand—I mean voice of necessity becking—I mean call. I realize it is our first morning in our new home, but life is hard, dearest, life is hard. You must let me go now. It is all for the best."

But she clung ever tighter.

"No, no, no, no, no!" she cried, although ordinarily she was not one to repeat herself. "I can't let you go—I can't, I can't, I can't let you go—I can't! Oh, just to think—on our first morning in our new home! Oh, it will seem ages! ages! If something were to happen to you while you are away! Our first separation!"

"Tush! Tush!" he tushed, bravely kissing her fears away.

And he tore himself away and went firmly down the cellar steps to fix the furnace, while she stood patting at the head of the cellar steps and waited yearningly.

was folly; they mewed a lingering good night, and then went off their trolley. Alas, I find it very hard my divers pets to slaughter; upon their graves in my back yard my eyes are shedding water. But better that some soldier feast and fills his waistline flabby, than feed boiled eggs to lazy beasts, to Towser or to Tabby.

Fads and Fashions.

Shepherd plaids are among the freshest of spring suits. There are a great many pointed necks in the new fashions. Small furs for spring promise to have a considerable vogue. Capes and cape-like coats will be the proper wraps for spring. Sleeveless jackets are among the prettiest of spring garments. Frills and ruffles have given place to embroidery on all occasions. Crepe de chine is frequently chosen for young girls' dresses. Blue serge and black satin continue to be a good combination. Buckles are used to some extent in fastening the simple girdles. A modified bustle effect is sometimes developed in peplum form. Kimono sleeves continue in evidence, but set-in sleeves dominate. Colored sweaters in bright colors are to be worn with white skirts. Blue serge continues to make the practical and becoming spring suit. Black patent leather belts are to be worn with voile and chiffon gowns. Frock and coat are more worn but not more fashionable than the tailored suit. Tiniest lace frills appear on some of the most charming new cotton waists. Natural-looking fruits, tempting enough to eat, trim the fashionable millinery. Worsted or silk monograms replace metal monograms on fabric handbags. If you have a locket tucked away, get it out and wear it. It is fashionable again. If one can wear a flower-trimmed hat becomingly, this is the season for them, as hats are laden with flowers. The newest girle is made of the material of the gown, and richly embroidered in beads of the same color or in jet.

CUTTING OUT WASTE.

I called my dog, as he passed by, and for an hour harangued him, explaining why he had to die, and then I dropped him. He saw the point of my remarks, and wagged his tail, forgiving; he heaved a pair of friendly barks, and I discontinued living. The grub I had to eat would keep a soldier feeding; and Towser couldn't pull his freight for France and so some bleeding. We're pampering ten million pups, we talk of conservation. I had nine cats, as fine as silk, Maltese, Angora, critters; and every day they lapped up milk and mowed for meat and fritters. This morning when they had their lunch—on liverwurst I fed them—I formally addressed the bunch, and said I must behead them. I pointed out in ringing terms that pampered cats are sinful, when many a weary soldier squirms because he lacks a skin full. The kittens saw that I was right, that feeding them

ANOTHER ADVANCE IN PALESTINE.

LONDON, March 8. British troops astride the Jerusalem-Nablus road in Palestine have advanced their positions along a front of 18 miles to a depth of three miles, the British war office announced to-day. The official statement reads: From Monday to Thursday our line astride the Jerusalem-Nablus road was steadily advanced. Little opposition was encountered. Yesterday the advance was to a maximum depth of three miles on a front of 18 miles. On Wednesday night the enemy blew up his bridge over the River Jordan at Elchoranien. During the week successful bombing raids were carried out by our offensive.

MONTENEGRO FIRM.

LONDON, March 8. Ninko Radoukevitch, Montenegrin Minister of War and Interior, who is now in London, in a letter to the Daily Chronicle, in the name of the King and Government, denies that Montenegro will make a separate peace.

THE USUAL RAID ON LONDON.

LONDON, March 8. Seven or eight German airplanes made a raid over England last night. One of them reached London and dropped bombs in the northwest and southwest districts of the city. Another raider dropped bombs in the northern district of London demolishing several houses. The following statement was made officially last night: The raid was carried out by seven or eight airplanes, one reached London and dropped bombs in the northwest and southwest districts. Another raider after dropping bombs in the north of London proceeded southward and dropped bombs in the northern district. Several houses were demolished. The raid demonstrated that the German aviators no longer depend upon moonlight. It was the first time the enemy had attempted a night raid over London, when there was no moon. The stars were out, however, and there was little wind. Londoners were taken by surprise. When the warning signals sounded theatres were just closing, but the streets were soon cleared. The warning to avoid danger from shrapnel was generally heeded, every one taking cover. The text of the official report says: The latest police reports state that eleven were killed and forty-six injured in last night's airplane raid. It is feared that in addition to these, six bodies are still buried in the wreckage. The casualties all occurred in London.

Several people were killed by the destruction of private property in the northeast of London. The house of a vicar was partly wrecked, but the vicar escaped. He is a special constable and had left home for duty when the warning came a few minutes before the explosion, which damaged his residence. The vicar worked throughout the night assisting the wounded and homeless in the neighborhood. Rescuers, who included Red Cross women, continued into the day. Eight hours to pull living persons from the wreckage of their homes. In one district two aged women clinging to each others arms were dug out alive, while at mid-day an elderly man was brought out suffering from his wounds. He had been buried with his wife and daughter who early had been extricated and who thought him dead. As he was placed in an ambulance the onlookers cheered. Several of the rescued persons still clung to frightened dogs and cats, while one woman
