Lady Wyvernes' Daughter.

CHAPTER XVI.

Regularly every quarter there came a letter from Madame Monteleone. The child, she said, had even more than her mother's beauty, with all the fire and spirit, all the pride and hauteur of her ancient race.

Lord Lynne shrank selfishly from seeing her. He did not care to reopen the old wounds that had once smarted so acutely. He dreaded lest the sight of the mother's face in the child should bring back the anguish he had taken years to deaden. So time rolled on; the Dowager Lady Lynne died happy in believing her son to be so. The golden-haired child grew up into a sweet and lovely girl; yet no word came to summon the eldest and dearest child to her father's home.

For Madame Monteleone life seemed renewed. Even as she had lived, hoped, and planned for Bianca, so she now lived and hoped for Inez. The same ambition was renewed, the same ideas were instilled into her mind. She devoted herself to the child's education; she tried to make her all that her mother had been; but no two characters were ever more dissimilar than that of the young mother and her only child. Bianca was gentle and yielding, Inez was proud and unbending; as well try to move a rock as persuade her to change when her mind was once made up. Bianca had heaped with reverence of the glories and honors of her race; Inez was proud of them, but frankly told her horrified grandmamma that in her opinion a little present comfort was worth all the past grandeur put together.

Madame Monteleone had managed her own daughter admirably; but Inez was beyond her abilities. She did not understand the child's passionate, ardent, artistic nature. She was half frightened when the rich musical voice sang of the hopes and wishes already forming in her young heart; she did not understand her. She could not tell why Inez craved to hear something of her absent English father, and looked wearied and melancholy when the poor lady spoke

"I Had Terrible Backache From Kidney Disease"

Mrs. M. A. McNeill, Canada St., N.B., writes: "I was troubled for years with terrible backache, resulting from kidney disease. At times in each month I remained in bed, the pain was more than I could stand, and to walk was almost impossible. I used about $50.00 worth of other medicines, but with little result. Now I am completely better, after using only five boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills."

"What is the use of it all?" sighed the girl; "I am young, and my face is like the picture in the gallery; but who cares for it?—who sees me?—who cares for my singing or anything else that I do? Was ever life so bare and dull as mine?"

Long hours in the evening gloaming were spent in wondering what the world was like beyond Serranto—that bright world where gay cavaliers wooed and won beautiful ladies, where dancing and music and song gladdened young faces and light hearts,—that world of which the few romances she had read, unknown to Madame Monteleone, gave her so fair a glimpse.

Inez Lynne's ardent imagination led her through all these scenes. Dreaming among the oranges and myrtles, she saw herself a queen among gay and gallant cavaliers, the queen of the tournament, the belle of the ball, for whose smiles and kind words men fought and struggled. The time must come for her, as for all other girls, when sweet love words would be whispered to her in the twilight, when her smile would give rapture and her frown despair. All these pictures she made for herself; and while the sun was still golden in the sky, before the flowers and birds were quite asleep, the sharp voice of old Caterina would be heard calling the young signora in; it was time to close the house and go to rest.

After a few cold, formal words with Madame Monteleone, the young girl was dismissed to her room. Standing by the window, watching the sun set and the moon rise over the Andalusian hills, the broken reveries were resumed. The dull, gloomy castle ceased to exist for her; she was in gay palaces and brilliant rooms. Love and homage surrounded her; the bravest and noblest sought her smiles.

From such glowing dreams the girl awoke with a shudder to the cold, stern reality of her life. She lived at last almost entirely in dreamland. There all was fair and charming, while the reality was dull and prosaic beyond measure. It was easier for that gifted, artistic, imaginative being to make a world for herself and live in it, than to school her proud spirit to bear patiently the monotony and gloom of her daily life.

Many faults, many errors, must be pardoned her; if there had been any outlet for that ardent imagination, the fate of Inez Lynne would have been different. Properly trained and educated, she would have made an artist or an authoress. Her quick, active, glowing fancy would have found legitimate occupation; as it was, it fed upon itself until the girl's whole life became one unreal dream. Even had she known the future that Madame Monteleone destined for her, it would have been better, but that lady, frightened and rendered cautious by her failure with Bianca, said nothing to Inez of Madrid, the Court, or the grand marriage she expected her to make. "Let it come upon her suddenly," she thought; "and she will all the more probably comply with my wishes."

No word was said to Inez that gave any prospect or hopes of brighter days. "I shall live here," she said to herself, "until I am old and wrinkled and cross as grandmamma. What will my life have been?—how shall I bear it through the long years?"

Wildly enough she beat against the bars, but all in vain. No bird in a cage was ever more solitary or more sad. Where was the English father of whom she heard ever and anon from the old servants a few mysterious words? Months ago, one day when she had longed more than ever to leave Serranto, she went boldly to Madame Monteleone, and asked where her father was.

Her heart was touched by the stately lady's face, as she folded her in her arms and said: "You are all mine, Inez; you were given to me to be my own, in your mother's place. No one in the wide world cares for you but me."

With her guardian's tears still wet upon her face, the girl lacked courage to say that the love and care given to her in Serranto were not sufficient—that she craved for a fuller life, wherein she might have some pleasure and happiness.

German Girls Prefer Strike Pay to Work.

ESSEN, May 3. (A.P.)—Thousands of women and girls have been thrown out of work due to the closing of factories in the Ruhr as an outcome of French and Belgian occupation, but nevertheless domestic are as difficult to acquire as in the cities of the United States. This is largely due to the fact that the women and girls draw strike funds of one kind or another, either from the municipalities or from the Berlin government which usually amount to more than they would receive for household services.

In many instances the women are furnished lodging and food by the authorities, and in addition, as part of the passive resistance program, they get a weekly allowance of marks as pin money. Near Essen an old German barracks has been converted into a sort of camp for unemployed women, and in this place alone more than 400 women are quartered.

German say there was never a time in recent years when servants were so scarce as to-day. The French and Belgian officers' families now in the Ruhr and Rhineland have the greatest difficulty in requisitioning cooks, maids and nurses, and often have to pay a premium to the German women as an inducement to come and work for them.

Dog Acts as Mother to Young Lion.

BERLIN, May 3 (A.P.)—Berlin's Zoo is probably more successful than any other in the world as a breeding place for wild animals. While it lost many inhabitants during the war, care was taken to keep pairs, and the cages are gradually being restocked with animals born in captivity.

Strange foster families are developed by the keepers, who have learned the difficulties of compelling certain mothers to look after their young under the unnatural conditions they face in captivity.

A few months ago, a fine lion cub was entrusted to a small black female dog. The young lion is now five times as large as his foster mother and is developing as a pup-py and he is as docile as a puppy and he and the little dog remain on the best of terms and play about together to the great joy of visiting children.

Unemployment in Berlin.

BERLIN, May 2 (A.P.)—Unemployment is increasing in Berlin at an alarming rate, and it is the subject of excited discussions in the City Council. Estimates of the number of unemployed the end of April varied from 90,000 to 200,000. Demands are being made by labor leaders that the city restore pavements, improve public buildings and extend subways to relieve the situation.

Headaches Are Usually Due to Constipation

When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so cannot give you a headache.

German Daily Newspaper Celebrates 250th Birthday.
Jena, May 7 (A.P.)—The Jena Zeitung, a daily newspaper, has observed the 250th anniversary of its establishment. On the basis of available records, it was founded years before the first American newspaper, which is said to have been the Boston News Letter, published by Bartholomew Green in 1765. The Jenische Zeitung is said to have been the descendant of the first founder, Johann Ludwig Neuberger. The biggest local story of the day undoubtedly was Napoleon's complete defeat of the Prussians at Jena in 1806.
