FALL WHEAT.—We much regret to learn on the authority of one of our Paisley Block farmers that the fall wheat in this quarter is much more seriously injured than was at one time anticipated. The season, hitherto, has been characterized by an unfavorable absence of rain, and although in many instances it has been very favorable for ploughing and sowing, the temperature has been low and unfavorable for germination. We hear that the growth of grass is very slow, and that cattle are suffering considerably in consequence.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Ottawa, April 30.

Sir John A. Macdonald asked leave to introduce a Bill to give effect to certain clauses in the Treaty of Washington. He said he merely wished to place the Bill on the orders of the day; and would not only say that the Bill was simply to suspend certain clauses of our Fisheries Act, and that such Act would take effect upon the production of the Government. Objection being taken, it was withdrawn.

Sir Francis Hincks then made his financial statement. He first referred to the comparative smallness of the public debt, which he asserted did not exceed $30,000,000, and then remarked that since the confederation over six millions of money had been expended on the account of revenue, which, in the last financial year (1870-71) the net debt had actually decreased. The savings bank deposits now amount to four and a half millions, and there were held in London at the present moment $1,362,400 in Canada bonds, as compared with $1,000,000 in 1869. Instead of having, as in 1869, six and a half millions due on exchequer bonds, they had not one on the first of July, 1871. On the Intercolonial Railway over eight millions had been expended; and they had four millions to the Intercolonial account in the Bank of Montreal. At the present time they had three millions King available in London for general purposes, and close upon one million as bank deposits. He then went over the accounts of the revenue and expenditure for 1870-71, on which he showed a surplus of $3,712,000. He added that on the current year there would be a surplus of $3,215,000, and on 1872-73, about $1,000,000; although in the absence of full estimates of expenditure, the last named amount was of course uncertain. He glanced at the different items from which the excess of revenue had accrued, the detailed statements of which have been published in our abstracts of the revenue returns. He justified his own nice calculations as to the revenue by reference to the apologies of the British Finance Minister under similar circumstances; and then went on to say that the present was the time to undertake the improvement of buildings for public service; pointing out that, if in any circumstances were different, many of the public works it was proposed to carry out might be postponed; while, on the other hand, not a few of them were of a productive character, and would be largely to the revenue when completed. He noticed some of the items of expenditure in the estimates, and referred, although as he said with great reluctance, to the Treaty of Washington. He felt it to have been exceedingly unfortunate that the fisheries question had been mixed up with other matters of Imperial and deeply regretted that the Premier had asked to sit upon the commission; but he alleged that they had no choice, and urged that, if we refused to settle the matter on the basis approved by the British Government, the people of the mother country might refuse to sanction the expense of assisting us in the protection of our rights, whilst our resistance would have excited fresh irritation in the United States. He deplored the result of the negotiations, but had always felt there was no way of escape. After dealing with the arguments that the settlement proposed was a man and shabby one, he asserted that the obtaining of a fresh guarantee from Great Britain was a surprise to many persons; and he traced Hon. Mr. Howe's late speech to a feeling of disappointment and apprehension that Great Britain would not give her assistance. He believed that not only would they get the guarantee they asked, but that they would be allowed to transfer the guarantee for fortifications ($11,000,000) to one for public works. He asserted that we could not borrow $10,000,000 on our own credit, at 5 per cent. per annum, but he calculated, if we had the guarantee we should get the whole at 4 per cent., a saving of $600,000 per annum. That was much better than going to negotiate a claim for Fenian rans. He admitted that his calculations had been based on getting only twenty millions for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Of thirty millions the charge at 4 per cent., or 1 per cent. for a sinking fund, might reach $3,000,000 per annum, but that would only accrue in the course of ten years, and in the meantime many of the works would be becoming productive. He next touched upon the fisheries question, and said that the country, illustrating his remarks by reference to statistics of exports and imports. He did not think it prudent to propose any reduction of taxation, especially as the United States were dealing with their tariff, and it might be necessary, especially if the value of raw materials were to be reduced, to raise a million of dollars, were removed from the American tariff, for us to admit that article free. He concluded by alluding to the great increase in the commerce between Canada and Great Britain, and rather severely criticised those who advocated any change in the relations, political or commercial, of the two countries.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie expressed his gratification at the state of the finances, but condemned in terms of the highest indignation the humiliating position in which the huck-toring proceedings of the Ministry had placed the country, and by this wretched chaffing we might save at the most $120,000 a year. He referred with great severity to Hon. Mr. Howe's freaks, and Mr. McDougall's late speeches, and deprecated utterly the idea of adopting a commercial policy that might discriminate against Great Britain. He did not agree with the proposal to leave the duties on imports untouched, considering that the surplus entitled the people to some relief, it being a sound principle to raise by taxation only what was required for the service of the year. After remarks from Sir A. T. Galt and Mr. McDougall, Mr. Blake proposed that the strongest terms the irregular manner in which the Treaty had been brought before the House. He related the Premier for putting up the Finance Minister to make apologetic excuses for the Treaty, instead of standing up manfully and explaining his policy. He then showed how enormous were the calculations of the Minister, and declared that $150,000 was all the guarantee could save to Canada; that being subject to large deductions from the claims of New Brunswick arising out of the abolition of her timber dues and other matters.

Mr. Galt again remarked that the banking measures of Sir F. Hincks would aggravate a crisis if it arose.

Mr. James Young made an able analysis of the financial statement, in which he called attention especially to the rapid growth of expenditure under the present Government.

After being some time in committee the House adjourned.
