"In a cold country like Canada, with no coal of its own, and an abundance of hydro-electric power, the only way to run the railways is by hydro-electric power. This is the first principle. Conditions in Norway and Sweden are almost identical with ours, and they are out for electric railways, but long hauls there are not near so favorable.
"In a short haul, such as between London and Toronto, with trains almost every minute, overhead maintenance charges would be reduced in comparison to the heavy expense where there are one or two trains daily."

Years after, grown to a man, and in a large, new country, he had great reason to remember his experiences. The work that he engaged in had made him an expert in chemicals—and when the world war came a little Allied power sought his aid to solve a great problem. What chemical process was there through which the clothes of the boys in the trenches could be passed to rid them of "cooties" and germs without harming the clothes?

After much research he was soon in possession of a formula for a washing cream built and perfected upon the basic principles that had been used for generations to wash the sheep. This he
