Plans for the engagement of the Grau, opera company at the Gardens next week open at Nordheimer's to-day. The company comes with favorable notices, and will no doubt draw well. The festival of St. John the Baptist will be observed by the masonic fraternity by a religious service at the Jarvis street baptist church Sunday afternoon next. Dr. Thomas will preach the sermon. A petition was presented to Mayor Boswell yesterday requesting him to call a public meeting to discuss the pumping ongine question. The meeting is to be held in St. Andrew's hall at 7,30 on Tuesday, June 24. The age of reason has not come to all people yet. As a World reporter was rid-ing a Sherbourne street car he was disgusted at the cruelty of a man who first called his dog in, and then kicked him out, and as he lay half stunned in the road, pelted him with huge rocks. To-day the Bon Marche will open 2 cases of fine Victoria, lawns, 1 case spot muslins, 1 case India muslins, and 3 cases cross bar muslins, and will offer them retail at wholesale prices. Call, and examine them. Farley & Co., 7 and 9 king street east.

From the Legal News. In an amusing little book published not long ago, "John Bull et son Ile," the English solicitor's bill of costs comes in for its share of satire. The following little bill is printed as a sample:

"To receiving a letter from you and To writing the answer...

these runs somewhat in this way: A person with a lawsuit on hand was bathing in the sea at Brighton, when he observed the head of his solicitor rise above the water, He immediately hailed him with the enquiry, "Mr. Jones, how is my case getting on?" "Famously," cried Mr. Jones, who immediately dived out of sight, and put an end to the consultation. At a later date the client read in his bill of costs the following item: • To conferring with you at the seaside as to your case..... are usually most prodigal in using them), it is well known that professional gentlemen have more or less to protect them-selves against those who would use their brains and experience without any acknow-ledgement. Some of the daily journals have been inclined to jibe at the case of Cooke v. Penfold, which is noted in the present issue. It seems to us that these writers are geese and that they are simply producing the sifflement which comes most natural to them. What are the facts? Mr. Penfold, a rural gentleman, had been appointed trustee to an estate. He was in doubt as to the to an estate. He was in doubt as to the legal form of conveyance and he set out to town for advice. He meets Mr. Brooke in a railway car. He knows him to be a lawyer, and he submits the difficulty to him and obtains a reply. Mr. Brooke gives an opinion for which Mr. Penford would no doubt quote him as the authority, and if it were incorrect Mr. Brooke's reputation would doubtless suffer. What was the upshot? The firm of Cooke & Brooke, to whom Mr. Brooke belongs, a firm, by the whom Mr. Brooke belongs, a firm, by the way, practising at Montreal, sent in to Mr. Penfold the very moderate memorandum of tharge of $3 for professional advice. Mr. Penfold is horror-stricken at the presumption of a lawyer who makes his based by professional work charging his bread by professional work, charging for an opinion given in a railway car, and engaged other counsel to contest the claim. There was incontestably a service rendered and the right. to recover for that service was equally in-contestable. The individual concerned must be the judge of the propriety of bringing the action. But an action being brought, the judge was guided by his sense of right, and gave judgment for the amount of the account, Mr. Brooke waiving his claim to costs of suit. The incident is useful in putting a check upon the tendency to "dead-head" at the expense of the profession. If people suppose that they can save their dollars by getting opinions on a railway car or across a hotel table, there will always be some mean enough to resort to the artifice. An Estimate of John Bright.

He is not known, and he never will be known, as a great administrator, as a great legislator, as a great master of parliamentary detail. He cannot even be considered a debater of the first order. He is a man, however, just as indispensable to the legislation which has been accomplished during his career as the minister who conducts a bill through parliament. As an orator he has acquired an equal renown in the house of commons and on company are to walk, you must be espe-popular platforms. Such are the power and fervor of his cloquence that it baskets and wraps, for the bundles which nown in the house of commons and on

About the audience he had of King John About the audience he had of King John he writes as follows:

The king inquired of me in Turkish if I was perfectly familiar with that language. I answered in the affirmative. If not (added the king in English) he would speak English with me. The following dialogue ensued:

Kits. There are a subject of the most King-Thou art a subject of the most mighty emperor of Austria, and dwellest at Kassala.

Myself—Yes, for many years past.

King—Thou hast now left Kassala and intendest to return to thy native country.

Myself—Such is my ardent desire.

King—Kassala will no doubt soon be in the power of Mohammed Achmed.

Myself—Unless a miracle happens, Kassala is lost. The governor will never be able to resist the superior forces of the Mahdi.

King—That is also my opinion. There is no relying upon assistance from Egypt, and when help comes from England it will be too late. Dost thou know Mohammed Achmed by sight?

Myself—It would have availed nothing, Myself—It would have availed nothing, as he is hostile to me and hates me.

King—If England and Egypt fulfil my idemands, I shall accord to the troops from Kassala and other endangered places in the Soudan free passage through my territory. Also to thee and all of thine will I allow safe escort through my realm upon payment of £200.

I timidly observed that only £50 had been stipulated, and that his majesty, in the exercise of his sovereign power, had quadrupled the price. No notice was taken of this remark either by the king or any of his suite. To my great surprise taken of this remark either by the king or any of his suite. To my great surprise the king now asked me: "Is it true that your crown prince Rudolf, your future monarch, is so learned a man as even to write books?" I replied in the affirmative, adding that the crown prince Rudolf was not only learned, but well accomplished in all chivairous arts. The andience now not ended

On my way to the treasurer, to whom I had to disburse the £200, I made the unpleasant discovery that my watch, hand-kerchief, snuffbox—in short, all I had about me in the open pockets of my gar-ments—had been stolen by the Abyssinians. Hints About Picnies. The most important part of a picni however, is not the weather or the place or the dinner. You may choose the most beautiful spot in the world, and spread the most delicious lunch ever prepared, and yet have the whole thing a complete failure, simply because the company was not well selected. Out-of-doors, where the not well selected. Out-of-doors, where the people are free from formality, unless they are congenial friends, and what Mrs. Whitney calls "Real Folks," they will be likely to feel ill at ease, and miss the support given by company, clothes and manners. Small picnics, for this reason among others, are usually much pleasanter than large picnics.

In making up the party, be sure to leave behind the girl who is certain to be too warm or too cold, or to think some other place better than the one where she is, and who has a "horrid time," if she has to submit to any personal inconvenience for the sake of others; and with her, the boy who loves to tease, and who is quite sure who loves to tease, and who is quite sure that his way is the only good way. Put into their places some others, young or old, who love simple pleasures, and are ready to help others to enjoy them.

Next in importance to the company is the place. It must not be at a great distance, or you will all be tired, not to say cross, when you arrive there. It must be reasonably sheafy and not too far from a reasonably shady, and not too far from a supply of good drinking water. If the advice of one of his black servants, to go to Makaki, the headquarters of the king of Abyssinia, and to purchase of the latter a protective escort for himself and his cara-an.
