

the world whitening the seas no more, but idly riding at anchor in Atlantic ports. But it would be more tragic to see the world of souls fascinated into a fatal repose, and renouncing their destiny of motion." Sometimes progressive souls are asked, by fearful mortals, when will you end with this enquiry? Their answer is, Never. To end is to stagnate, and die. The infinite truth of the universe is before us. What we have got of truth we keep, but forever press on for more. And as this is the normal condition of man here, it will be his natural condition hereafter.
