

I like the idea of saying each year that we recognize the youth of the country—because each year it is a different youth. Youth passes very quickly and they should not be classified as one group. As the poet, John Oxenham, said:

For every man there openeth a way
A high way and a low
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go
Some souls choose the high way
And some souls choose the low
And all the rest on misty flats
Drift to and fro
But every man and woman decideth
The way their souls shall go.

I am pleased that the hon. member brought the motion forward, and pleased too that he is so anxious that all of us should agree. I am most pleased to associate myself with the motion worded in this way. I think we should remember that what we do or say is of little importance because we are really in their hands, the hands of the generation called youth; the future is theirs, not ours.
