

State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Let me put the question to you conversely, and more pointedly:

Is it possible that we, the People, in writing our rules, wherein we surrendered much of our Liberty to Federal and State Government, failed to set aside and save any Liberty for ourselves, and our Posterity, over which no Government could exercise domain?

Of course, there exists in America a Land of Liberty, guaranteed by our Constitution, upon which neither Government may trespass.

We, the People, have reserved to ourselves many rights with which Government may not constitutionally interfere, and which, in fact, constitute "the Land of the Free".

The Supreme Court did not create it; our Fathers created it, and it is the duty of the Supreme Court to protect it.

It is true that its boundaries may not be precisely indicated by sign posts.

It is true that at times we may have to look to a divided Supreme Court to say whether a given enact-
