UNITED STATES FARMERS LIKE THE CANADIAN WEST

Men From the Dakotas Quicker to Appreciate Conditions Than Eastern Canadians.

To just what extent Eastern Canadian farmers are slower, if any, than United States farmers, to grasp the opportunities for fortune-making offer-ed by the great agricultural territories of the prairie provinces, a World reporter, who recently returned from a trip to the great wheat belt of Western Canada, finade close enquiry. The situation has two sides to it, but the Ontario farmers' side is annexed to an excuse. They go west, investigate the country, or stay at home and investigate by correspondence, and in too many instances are unable to understand how new land can be broken, seeded, and a profitable crop harvested from it the first year. Therefore, they conclude "something must be wrong, much to their own loss." They have been used to clearing a timbered tractafew acres this year, a few next, and, by slow degrees, acquire a farm. In this faulty respect they are slower than the United States farmers, who have been pouring into the provinces from the Dakotas, the Palouse country (Washington), Minnesota, lowa, Nebraska, and from all American agricultural states which were formerly prairie country. These farmers appreciate the condition they find in the "last west," and are keen to take advantage of a golden opportunity. They have had experience with prairie land and know its nature and its worth. Is there anything more natural than their rapid influx to our country? Many of them were originally Canadians, who went to the States many years ago to build homes and farms for themselves, and now that their land is deteriorating in fertility to some extent, taxes steadily advancing and a of the prairie provinces, a World redeteriorating in fertility to some ex-tent, taxes steadily advancing and a gradual decrease in the earning capa-city of their land, they are returning to their native heath with experience, money and good citizenship, and they

He said, however, the cabinet was still considering the re-organization of the health department.

Notwithstanding the premier's statement that the appointment of a minister had not been discussed it is believed that Mr. Whitney has in his mind just what The World has said. But as an official remarked yesterday, there is no authority at present for the appointment of a minister. There is no department for the minister to preside over, and such a department will have to be created by the legislature. So that whatever the premier has in his mind to-day it is perhaps premature to name a presiding genius.

Some time ago the government placed a quarantine on hogs, on account of the prevalence, at that time, of hog cholera, Thise three townships of Tilbury East, West and North, were the first to be quarantined, and all of the hogs in these townships were killed off. In order to meet these expenses, the farmers in many cases had to sell their cattle for what they could get for them.
