TEMPERANCE ISSUE STRONG IN IRELAND

Measure of Reform was Discussed at a National Gathering in Belfast.

The annual conference of the National Association of Official Temperance Advocates, a body which comprises fully 200 secretaries, lecturers and agents, was held in Belfast recently, under the presidency of Mr. W. Wilkinson. A splendid reception was accorded the delegates by members of the leading temperance organizations in the city, and by a number of prominent churchmen and civic representatives. Rev. Dr. McIlveen, moderator of the general assembly, extended a cordial welcome on behalf of the church. He was happy to inform them, he remarked, that temperance had greatly progressed in Ireland, especially among the intelligent classes. He thought the intelligent classes of the community were coming more and more to see the evil of even the moderate use of intoxicating drink. He was happy also to inform the conference that the progress of temperance in the church with which he was connected was very considerable. The temperance cause always has strong supporters among the ministers of the Presbyterian church in Ireland, ever since one of their number, Dr. John Edgar, became the father of the pledge movement in Ireland, and what was true of the Presbyterian church he believed was also true of the other evangelical churches in the city. He hoped and believed the great temperance measure at present before the House of Commons would become law. They were sorry that it did not apply to Ireland yet. Nevertheless, they were strongly in its favor, because if the principles which it contained were put on the statute book for England, it could not be long before they would be made to apply to Ireland. Referring to the principles of the bill, he pointed out that if public houses were to be withdrawn and compensation paid for this advantage, it would be a terrible thing if drinking clubs would be allowed to spring up where the public houses stood. The public house was bad, but he would say the drinking club would be worse. One of the great things they were most anxious about in Ireland was when they got a temperance act to have it properly administered. The fact of the matter was that the aim of the law in regard to temperance was being paralyzed by those sitting on the bench. Friends of the trade were not ashamed to take their place there, while he thought those who held different opinions had not the courage to take their position on the bench and indicate what ought to be the law of the land on this question. Rev. J. D. Lamont, vice-president of the Methodist conference, also addressed the delegates.

MOORE'S ALMANAC TELLS OF DANGERS FOR 1909

Dread Year for the Monarchs and Danger to U. S. President.

London, Oct. 19.—"Old Moore's Almanac" for 1909 has just been published. "Old Moore's" specialty is prophecy, and 1909, according to his almanac, is going to make things among the royalties hum. November, always a dread month for prophets, is even going to provide "danger for the president of the U. S. A." As is customary with prophets, the nature of the danger is carefully concealed.

Here are some of the things which 1909 has in store for the world:

February, 1909—A warning to the Shah of Persia to be careful and take no risks.

April—Mars culminates at St. Petersburg, warning the czaa to guard his person.

May—The affliction of the luminaries is evil for the king and government.

August—Saturn will culminate, an evil augury for the ruler of Persia.

October—Mars will be on the nadir, warning the czar.

November—Danger to the president of the U. S. A.

December—Grave danger to the king and disasters in high places.

IMPERIAL AFFAIRS

(Victoria Colonist.)

Col. Seeley in a speech recently delivered in Liverpool expressed the belief that the time is drawing near when a great council of the Empire will be held for the discussion of the problems presented by Oriental immigration and subjects of general interest. We also learn that a movement has been started in London to establish a Colonial Chamber of Commerce and Exchange, the object being the promotion of inter-imperial trade. Things of this nature are full of significance. It is evident that the Oriental problem can only be satisfactorily settled by the adoption of some general policy applicable to the Empire as a whole. It does not follow that the policy must be identical in its application to all parts of the Empire. There are places where the Oriental seems not only to be welcome enough, but the only colonist who can meet certain essential requirements. There are other places where he is not wanted and his presence is mischievous. It seems reasonable that some general conclusion shall be reached as to what doors shall be open to him and what shall be closed. The question of Imperial defence is also one that is pressing for solution, and it is being forced to the front by the recent action of Australia. There are certainly many things which such a council as that proposed by Col. Seeley could discuss profitably.

The development of inter-imperial commerce is also of prime importance. We never have taken the position that Imperial trade preference is essential to Imperial solidarity, for we have always realized the possibility that, in any attempt to adjust the various tariffs to each other difficulties might arise which would have a tendency to drive the different dominions apart. We do not think that this must necessarily be the case, but it is a contingency that must be kept in mind. Yet inter-imperial trade is not dependent upon a preference. Such an arrangement, if it can be reached, will vastly benefit such trade; but a great commerce can be built up without it, and a Colonial Chamber of Commerce and Exchange in London would be a potent factor in promoting it. One of the primary requirements of the Empire is that the people of its constituent parts should know more about each other's requirements and each other's products. The appointment of representatives of the British Board of Trade will be productive of admirable results in this direction and the institution of such a chamber would have a potent influence in the same line.
