DISPLACING KING COAL
(From the Wall Street Journal)
King Coal is very much harassed in his former undisturbed fields. The electrifying of steam plants, mines, factories and even railroads is going ahead at a steadily increasing rate, but while coal may, unperceptibly to far, lose some business in the domestic market, export sales are increasing. By-product plants are being erected, and operators are looking forward to the time when the wasteful and costly methods of coal transportation will be done away with and electricity will be produced right at the mine and be transported cheaply and quickly to the consumer, cooking your dinner, heating your house, running your factory, or carrying you across the continent, untroubled from soot and cinders.

What change such a transformation may take is best demonstrated by what it has done for the Pacific Coast, and especially for San Francisco. However, electricity had less to do with this change than oil, which has supplanted coal to an extent at first unthought of. All harbor and coastwise, as well as all Transpacific shipping is using oil for fuel. Gas is made from oil, and the residue is pressed into briquettes. The factories use oil, and the oil stove warms the house in the rainy season.

The childless parson sought to cheer the parent of an overflowing household. "My man, you must learn to be contented," he said. "Months are never sent without bread to fill them."
"Maybe you are right," said the parson, "but the mouths are all sent to our house and the bread to yours."

THE LUMBER MARKET
(Halifax Chronicle)

Since our last report there has been a decided decline in prices on the British market. The price now quoted is $19.10 per standard, whereas it was before from $20 to $22 for spruce. Local lumber dealers say that stocks are not very heavy on the other side. It is simply a question of supply and demand. One shipper tells us that of late the British government has been importing a large quantity of timber on its own account, and instead of using it all immediately, as heretofore, has been selling quantities to munitions factories, thus breaking into the channels of trade of the ordinary individual timber dealer. The government also has departed from its custom and stored large quantities of lumber, this being the first time the government has done so since the war began. Freight rates have further declined and, as shipments are still going from this province at the high freight rates contracted for before the recent slump in the freight market, local shippers are not always over-pleased with the situation. One explanation of the decline in freight rates is that after the battle of Horn Reef, when the German high sea fleet was sent yelping back to Kiel for repairs, nearly two hundred steamers which had been held up in the Baltic for a long time made a safe getaway, being light and coasting along within the three mile limit. The latest quotation on freights from Halifax to England for lumber is 300 shillings a standard.

The American market for Nova Scotia laths is weak but for lumber is better. Freight rates still rule high so that the net rate for our shippers is not any fancy price.

The West Indies and Cuba markets are keeping very active for spruce and pine and pine boards. Freight rates are ruling very high. One shipper paid as high as $15-16 a thousand for a charter to Trinidad.

An officer lately returned from Alexandria bringing a story of the British soldier's humor. A certain curio hunting captain had prevailed upon two privates to move his effects. They managed everything save a wretched packing case, which defied their united efforts. As they paused to wipe the sweat from their brows, one asked:
"What the deuce is in it, Bill?"
"T' Pyramids," answered Bill promptly.

MEDICAL WRITERS AND THE PAPER FAMINE

(From the Medical Record)
We are all familiar with the physician who goes around laden with reprints which he forces upon acquaintances. He is the same gentleman who persists in discussing every paper presented in the medical meeting, whether he has anything to say germane to the subject or not. On examining his productions for a year, we find, as a rule, little original work, and that little first published in a leading periodical and then reprinted with slight revision in many smaller ones.

One interesting case is dragged in ad libitum et ad nauseam to illustrate points in many papers, and his references are nearly always confined to himself. In view of the destruction of the forests to feed the paper mills, in view
