A correspondent of the London Gardmar's Grophicle of May 12th states that he has discovered a means by which he is enabled to atrike and grow an almost incalcutable number of plants in a very small space, without an atom of soil of any kind.
He says—'I am not aware this mode of propagation has ever been made known by any other person, so that, if you think it worthy of notice, you will do me a favor if you will give it publication. I also further the to state that my striking apparatus is simple, portable, and my own invention; simple, portable, and my own invention; and I need not explain to you that it is on attretly scientific principles, founded on the organic structure of plants. After the cuttings are probably struck, a little moss is tied round them; they will keep for a month as that state.

tings are probably struck, a little moss is tind round them; they will keep for a month in that state.

The Philadelphia Gardner's Monthly, referring to this and other communications on the subject, aspar—'In one of our first numbers, the secret came out that there was no more difficulty in striking the eyes of Native than of Foreign Grapes, provided, after they were cut ready for planting, they were suffered to his for two weeks mixed with damp moss in a place secure from drying. Here they form a slight callosity, and when planted all grow. This hint we have reason to know has been extensively acted 20, and thousands of dollars have been made through the information thus given. The hint, also given by others of our correspondents, about lawing cuttings of such things as as Cotonasters, Prunusse, etc., in dark cellars in dry mass, when they would push roots freely—the accounts of striking in Sphagnum moss, and many other details of practice and observation, have all pointed conclusively to the great principle, namely, that callus can formed in any cutting before being stated in the soil, and where that is effected, it can readily be made to root.

It is, in fact, now become well known to formed in any cutting before being start in the soil, and where that is effected, it can readily be made to root.

It is, in fact, now become well known to come—we may say many—of our most skilled propagators, that all cuttings can he made to callous, and then be made to grow. Apples, peaches, cherries and plums are now freely struck from cuttings by several in our immediate vicinity, and many kinds of frees seen thought impossible to propagate in that the same time that will go out by inverting the first the bottom of the bottle, and water poured on. Then all the water is drained out that will go out by inverting the bottle, and the cuttings placed loosely in. No cork is played in the bottle; exporation takes place slowly, and the cutting son forms the desired callos.

'The whole secret, in fact, is in allowing free accessed hit to all parts of the cutting, at the same time taking care that exaporation shall not be so excessive as to dry up the cutting.'

PLANT PRAS DEER.—The theory researchy advocated of planting peas very deeply in the earth, in order to prolong the bearing capacity of vines, has been well tested in Williams, and found to be correct. A namer told me that he plowed a furrow beans deep, scattered the seed peas at the brown, and turned a deep furrow upon them with the plow, covering them to the depth of twelve or fourteen inches. They pushed their way up through this thick covering of earth very soon, and instead of turning yellow at the bottom and dying after the first athering, they blossomed and bore until he was tired of picking the pols. If such a result will be uniformly realized from the plan, pea culture may be made more profit. plan, pea culture may be made more profit-able than hitberto.—N. E. Farmer.

CREMONILE.—In the Iri-h Gardner's Magazine it is stated, not only that decorties of the leaves of the common chamomile will destroy insects, but nothing contributes so much to the health of a garden as a numter of plants dispersed through it. No green-house or hot-house should be without chamomile in a green or drived state; either the states or the flowers will answer. It is a singular fact that when a plant is drooping YRART — Mrs H. Jessup, Chautauque Co., N. Y., recommends to the readers of the Agriculturist her method of preparing yeast, which is as follows: To any quantity of water desired, add sufficient hops to make it very strong, and let it steep slowly two or three hours. Then boil it a few minutes, strain out the hops, put the liquor back is the kettle, let it boil moderately, and add flour until a stiff batter is formed. When thoroughly scalded, put it in a jar to cool, and while a little warm, add yeast to be cool, and while a little warm, add yeast to be cool, and while a little warm, add yeast to be cool, and while a little warm, add yeast to be cool, and while a little warm, add yeast to be cool, and while a little warm, add yeast to be cool.
