Mrs. Stanlay was in bed when she becard her husband's cries. She rushed out of the house, clad only in the night gown, her feet bare and entered the enclosure. She was in time to see the buck toss her husband bodily into a brook and then it turned upon her. When Mrs. Stanley entered the yard a small collie dos, owned by the couple had entered too, and it was at this point that the dog proved her worth. The dog set upon the buck. She bit and barked and bit again. At last, unable to disnegard her longer, the buck turned his attention from the man and woman to the little tawny creature that darted in and out, inflicting telling naps but cluding all retalitatory tunges.

Wounded and exhausted, Mrs. Stanley was attended and breeding in the brook.
