An effort is being made to re-organize the old St. John Athletic Club or rather to organize an athletic club to take the place of that once thriving organization. Those who are taking up the scheme feel that they will be successful in reviving the interest in general sport in St. John. A canvass of young men who would support such a club is talked of.

A new monthly jointal, Dogs and Foultry, has been just issued and is rapidly finding its way into the homes of those interested in the kennel, poultry and pet stock line. It is the official organ of the New Brunswick Poultry Kennel and Pet Stock Association and Thomas McDullough association.

The action of the local government, in ordering an investigation into the affairs of the public hospital, St. John, will be generally commended. If this institution is run on the slipshod plan that is afleged, then it is time that the public knew it and a remedy was applied. On the other hand if the affairs of the hospital are properly managed, it is just as necessary that the fact should be made known, so that public confidence in it may be restored.—St. Andrews Beacon.

The majority of those in the city who took part in the action at Paardeberg are of the opinion that "G" company will not partake of the annual dinner on the 27th inst with "H" company, in Halifax, as has been previously stated. For a variety of private reasons, many of the men here state that a trip to Halifax would entail considerable inconvenience, much as they might desire to go. They much as they might desire to go. They feel that by this time the matter as to being present at Halifax should have been definitely settled. The general preference appears to be given the holding of a "G". company dinner in the city on the 27th inst, as was the case last year.

The manifests of the winter port steamers discharging cargo at St. John this week disclose very heavy importations for Messrs. Manchester, Robertson & Allison. the helping of mankind and among them all, in none had the advance been to better purpose than in the treatment of disease. The day had passed when the old-fashioned doctor came to the house looking very wise, supposedly, with a list of all the ailments common to mankind in one pocket and their corresponding antidotes in the other. Now-a-days drugs were not looked upon as such a necessity in the curing of disease as formerly. Through the improved skill of nursing many, people were cured without drugs and many others in spite of them. So much reliance was not always put in nurses but they had always been in existence, more or less efficient. Today the nurse had come to occupy a higher position in the world of science. She was now looked upon as the partner of the medical man, in his struggle against disease. The question now before us was: "How are we going to bring these forces together to the best advantage. He was proud to belong to a fraternity that could help the sick poor without financial recompense, if necessary. But nurses were different, they were ladies and required a certain amount of expenditure before their services could be commanded. Every civilized country was well supplied with hospitals, and in those institutions skilled medical aid was supplemented by the skill of the trained nurse. The amount of assistance she brings to a community, could not be estimated. The the skill of the trained nurse. The amount of assistance she brings to a community could not be estimated. The requirements of the trained nurse comprised self-reliance, fortitude, gentleness and a healthy mind in a healthy body. These features, the speaker was pleased to say, were emphasized in St. John nurses, who always found high positions wherever they went. The education of the nurses of Victorian Order was practical.
