

[The Author publishes the following Discourse with a perfect consciousness of its many defects, and its entire want of merit as a literary composition—but is induced to offer it to the favourable consideration of the public, with the hope that it may obtain circulation, when the motives for its publication are made known, which are, to assist by the proceeds of its sale, in liquidating the debts, and in furnishing the new Church at Grand Manan, which the inhabitants of the island are unable to do, having already contributed to the extent of their limited means.

The Author considers it necessary to apologize for having allowed so much that is merely of local interest, to remain in the sermon,—but, as many of the circumstances connected with the event which caused its production have, and may be misrepresented, he considers it requisite to publish it without any material alteration.]

GRAND MANAN, March 1841.
