THE FRONT.

Descendant of the famous Black Watch has fought his way to the front rank in the business life of this country. Boyhood hobby has now made him famous. Ralph Connor just about touched the heart of modern Canadian history when he wrote those interesting books which have the initial scenes of the plots laid in the good old county of Glengarry—stories that have done more to show the sturdiness, the brain, and the brawn, than perhaps the closest readers could dream—stories that bring back to students of history the heroic deeds of the forefathers of these men who, well along to centuries ago, left the moors and the hills in the land of the heather and took the tedious and hazardous journey to the then wilds of a new country—that is now Canada—to work out their own fortunes and take their part in the building and development of the land of their adoption.

The history of the county of Glengarry when finally written will prove a repetition of the valor, bravery, and heroism of the famous regiment, the "Black Watch," of then, and to-day, always in the "firing line," alert for duty, ready for service, shoulder to shoulder, fighting for King, Queen, and country; and this sturdy tenacity will never die.

Great-grandfathers have passed away, grandfathers have gone to their reward, and the old spirit lives in fathers, sons, and grandsons, and every calling, profession, enterprise, and duty, public and private, is living to praise the day when from old Scotia's shores came these worthy forebears.

FRUITFUL OF BIG MEN.

Glengarry has given to Canada some of her greatest statesmen and parliamentarians, Glengarry has given to Canada some of her noblest civilian soldiers, Glengarry has given to Canada some of her cleverest professional men, Glengarry has given to Canada many of her merchant princes, Glengarry has given to Canada and the world many of her greatest industrial minds.

These men have literally hewn their way to success out of the unbroken forests of this grand old county; and no matter where, to and fro, on the broad earth the Glengarrion finds himself to-day, there is just one great heart to all the Glengarrion folk, and the thousands of miles that may separate them does not sunder the cord of interest that "every man's weel is my weel." It may seem clannish, but one cannot find fault with it when every line seems to read, "our own and our country's good."

Whether you know his name or not, if you should hear a man say, "I am from Glengarry," you are fairly safe in saluting him with "How are you to-day, 'Mac'."

SUCCESSFUL IN MILLING.

That brings us to the real subject, the family, the man of whom you are now reading and introduces to you Mr. A. C. McLeod, who has developed and brought to success one of Canada's greatest industries, the making of flour.

There were, and still are, many McLeods in Glengarry. A. C. McLeod's folks lived there, and he was born there. His school days were spent there, and it was in Glengarry County that he really learned practical milling. He was a fairly bright boy in his classes, and might have gone on in an educational way and become one of the county's prominent men professionally, but he was a born miller. He truly loved the old grist mill nearby, and many an hour he spent there, and many an excuse he made to get there, and he felt himself quite a man when one day the old miller let him "try his hand at picking a stone." At home, when there was inquiry for the boy's whereabouts, it was dollars to doughnuts he would be found down at the mill.

"Milling was my only thought," says Mr. McLeod, "from the earliest I can remember. When I wanted to go at it as my life work, the family doctor diagnosed me too delicate a chap for the milling trade, that I could never stand it, the dust of the mill would finish me before I was more than half-grown. But you see, here I am, after these twenty-odd years, with no visible signs of any evil effects, while I have been practically

D. M. ALLAN writes: "I am now feeding INTERNATIONAL POULTRY FOOD to my flock of Black Minorca, and I am open for competition against any flock in this or any other State."

1,500 EGGS FROM 30 HENS IN 60 DAYS

"I feed my hens INTERNATIONAL POULTRY FOOD and my 30 hens laid 1,500 eggs in sixty days," says Ira C. Eldridge.

How many eggs are you getting? Think of the money you can make by using INTERNATIONAL POULTRY FOOD. It doubles the number of eggs, by doubling the health of the hens. It keeps fowls in perfect condition—makes them lusty and vigorous—makes them scratch and eat—and lay all winter.

INTERNATIONAL POULTRY FOOD protects fowls against Cholera—in fact, many breeders say that it is the best Chicken Cholera Cure in existence. Price, 25c., 50c. and $1.00. Sold by dealers everywhere.
