THE MYSTERY OF AGATHA WEBB.

By Anna Katharina Green, Author of "The Leavenworth Case," "The New Lens," "Hind and Ring," Etc., Etc.

Copyright, 1910, BY ANNA KATHARINA GREEN.

"I hesitate," she faltered, "but not from any doubt of Frederick, to tell you just what I think lies at the bottom of the sudden change observable in him. Miss Page (you see, I can name her, if you cannot) has proved herself so unworthy of his regard that the shock he has received has opened his eyes to certain feelings of his own which made his weakness in her regard possible. I do not know of anything else. Do you?"

At this direct question, which pierced to the very quick of his trouble, breathed though it was by tender lips and launched in ignorance of the barb which carried it to his heart, Mr. Sutherland recoiled and cast an anxious look upon the door; then, with forced composure, he quietly said, "If you do not wish to see me, I will not see you, and let me hope his sympathy how should I, who am his father, but have never been his confidant?"

"Oh," she cried, holding out her hands, "such a good father! Some day he will appreciate that fact as well as others. Believe it, Mr. Sutherland, believe it!" And then, ashamed of her glowing interest, which was a little more pronounced than fitted her simple attitude of friend toward a man professing in love with another woman, she faltered a little and cast the shyest of looks upward at the grand but troubled face she had never seen turned toward her with anything but kindness. "I have confidence in his good heart," she added, with something like dignity.

"Would God that I could share it!" was the only answer she received. Before she could recover from the shock of these words Mr. Sutherland was gone.

Agnes was a little troubled by this interview, for after she had heard the gate click behind these two friends had carried that precious something away with her up stairs there was a lingering in the step with which she trod the little white embowered chamber, sacred to her girlish dreams, that bespoke an overcharged heart a heart that, before she slept, found relief in these few words that she whispered into the night to her laden with the sweetness of honey-suckle.

"Can it be that he is right? Did I need such a warning—I who have hated this man and who thought that it was my hatred which made it impossible for me to think of anything or anybody else when we parted from each other last night? Oh, me, it is so!" And from the great, wide world without, tremulous with moonlight, she echoed seemed to come back:

"Woe to thee, Agnes Halliday, if this be so!"

CHAPTER XX. AGATHA'S HEIR.

Meanwhile Mr. Sutherland and Frederick stood facing each other in the former's library. Nothing had been said during their walk down the hill, and nothing seemed likely to proceed from Frederick now, though his father, waited with great and growing agitation for some explanation that would relieve the immense strain on his heart. At last he himself spoke dryly, as we all speak when the heart is fullest and we fear to reveal the depth of our emotions.

"What papers were those you gave into Agnes Halliday's keeping? Any thing which we could not have more safely, not to say discreetly, harbored in our own house?" Frederick, taken aback, for he had not realized that his father had seen these papers, hesitated for a moment; then he boldly said:

"They were letters—old letters—which I felt to be better hidden in this house than in it. I could not destroy them."

"When were these letters written?" "I gave them into the guardianship of the most conscientious person I know. I hope you won't demand to see these letters. Indeed, sir, I hope you won't demand to see them. They were not written for your eye, and I would rather rest under your displeasure than have them in any way made public."

Frederick showed such earnestness rather than fear that Mr. Sutherland was astonished. "When were these letters written?" he asked. "Late or before—You say they are old. How old?" Frederick's breath came easier.

"Some of them were written years ago—most of them, in fact. It is a personal matter. Every man has such. I wish I could have destroyed them. You will leave them with Agnes, sir?" "You astonish me," said Mr. Sutherland, relieved that he could at least hope that these letters were in no wise connected with the subject of his own flighty suspicions. "A young girl to whom you certainly were somewhat indifferent a week ago is a curious guardian of letters you decline to show your father?"

"I know it," was Frederick's sole reply.

"I know it," was Frederick's sole reply.

WILSON'S FLYPAD POISON

Will kill every fly in your house or store. All you have to do is to get the flies to the Pads. Directions in each packet show how to do this.

Somehow the humility with which this was uttered touched Mr. Sutherland and roused hopes he had supposed dead. He looked his son for the first time directly in the eye and with a beating heart said:

"Your secrets, if you have such, might better be intrusted to your father. You have no better friend." And there he stopped with a horrified, despairing feeling of inward weakness, if Frederick had committed a crime, anything would be better than knowing it. Turning partially aside, he fingered the papers on the desk before which he was standing. A large envelope, containing some legal documents, lay before him. Taking it up mechanically, he opened it. Frederick as mechanically watched him.

"I know," said the latter, "that I have no better friend. You have been too good, too indulgent. What is it, father? You change color, look ill. What is there in that paper?"

Mr. Sutherland straightened himself; there was a great reserve of strength in this broken down man yet. Fixing Frederick with a gaze more penetrating than any he had yet bestowed upon him, he folded his hands behind him, with the document held tightly, between thumb and forefinger.

"When you borrowed that money from me, you did it like a man who expected to repay it. Why? Whence did you expect to receive the money with which to repay me? Answer, Frederick; this is your hour for confession!"

Frederick turned so pale his father dropped his eyes in mercy. "Confess!" he repeated. "What should I confess? My sins? They are too many. As for that money, I hoped to pay it as any son might hope to pay a gambler's debt. I said I meant to work. My first money earned shall be offered to you. I—"

"Well? Well?" His father was holding the document he had just read opened out before his eyes.

"Didn't you expect this?" he asked. "Didn't you know that that poor man, that wretchedly murdered, most unhappy, whose death the whole town mourns, had made you his heir? That by the terms of this document seen by me here and now for the first time, I am made executor and you the inheritor of the $100,000 or more left by Agatha Webb?"

"No!" cried Frederick, his eyes glued to the paper, his whole face and form expressing something more akin to terror than surprise. "Has she done this? Why should she? I hardly knew her."

"No, you don't know her. And she? She hardly knew you; if she had, she would have abhorred rather than enriched you. Frederick, I had rather you were dead than stand before me the inheritor of Philemon and Agatha Webb's hard earned savings."

"You're right, it would be better," murmured Frederick, hardly heeding what he said. Then, as he encountered his father's eye resting upon him with implacable scrutiny, he added in weak repetition: "But why give her money to me? What was I to her that she should will me her fortune?"

The father's finger trembled to a certain line in the document, which seemed to offer some explanation of this, but Frederick did not follow it. He had seen that his father was expecting a reply to the question he had previously put, and he was resting on it in his mind how to answer it.

"When did you know of this will?" Mr. Sutherland now repeated. "For know of it you did before you came to me for money?"

Frederick summoned up his full courage and confronted his father resolutely. "No," said he, "I did not know of it. It is as much of a surprise to me as it is to you."

ANOTHER WOMAN JOINS THE ARMY

Of Western Women Who Have Found Relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

After Three Years of Suffering Madame Dufault of St. Boniface is Telling Her Neighbors of Her Wonderful Cure.

ST. BONIFACE, Man., July 7th—(Special)—Cured of a complication of diseases, each a direct result of disordered kidneys, Madame Oct. Dufault, of St. Victoria street, this city, has joined the grand army of the women of the west who are telling their neighbors that Dodd's Kidney Pills are suffering women's best friend.

"I suffered for three years," Madame Dufault states, "and I may say I had pains in my head, I was nervous and tired all the time; there were dark circles around my eyes, and they were puffed and swollen, Heart fluttering added to my fears."

"But when I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills I soon began to get better. I took thirteen boxes in all, but now I am a well woman again. I think Dodd's Kidney Pills are a grand remedy."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure women's ailments because nine-tenths of these ailments come from sick kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure sick kidneys.
