But there is a most encouraging side as we note that territory once occupied by the Hun, now com-manded by Canadians, is again be-ing turned into gardens by the French folk who are returning and which they were driven. It shows too, the great confidence the French have in the Canadians as they stand given tasks, worthy of their prowess and manhood, to complete. That they have always more than meas-ured up and made for themselves an incomparable name is a matter of history. As they address themselves history. As they address themselves to harder tasks in the tremendous times of the immediate present they will continue to add glory and honor to their names and homeland. First impressions, here more eve than elsewhere, go deepest. We are passing through experiences which Mankind was never so happily inspired as when it made a cathedral a thing as single and specious as a statue to the first glance, and yet, on examination, as lively and interesting as a forest in detail. The height of spires cannet be taken by trigonometry; they measure absurdly short but how fall they are to the admiring eye! And where we have so many elegant pro-portions growing one out of the other and all togethers into of the where we have so many elegant pro-portions growing one out of the other, and all together into one, it seems as if proportion transcended itself and became something differ-ent and more imposing 1 never could fathom how a man dares to lift up his voice to preach in a cathedral.
