"My eyes are filled with childish tears.

My heart is idly stirred.

For the same sound is in my cars

As in those days I heard.

The spell of local association has always been strong upon me. As I pass along the banks of my ancient and well-beloved companion, the wan water, the changes of my life rise up before me, each with its separate section and dwelling-place, these deils and pensive glons—these broad glades, and grouped brotherhoods of old trees—they are peopled with the things that have been; they bear upon them, as upon so many severa pages, the story of my life.

And so I dwell among them, and as my pleasure am again a solirary child, a dreaming youth, a stricken man—i feel myself of kin to myself in all these changes. Swiftly these years have carried me over the world's broad highway, but with this white hair upon my head I am still the child to whose first dreams this water murmured its plaintive symphony. I know myself little wiser, and in nothing more theughtful. It is the things around us that change—it is not we.

For I confess myself as credulous still of ideal generosity and truth, as I was when I had counted only twenty summers. I have not been able yet to tutar myself to suspicion—the vision splendid has not quite departed—I cannot put the luster of that colestial light, which once appareled all things, away out of my eyes, even when those eyes are old; and Nature in her grave nobleness is not less, but more dear now, when I remember that I shall soon bid her good even, to enter into the presence of her Lord and mine. New heavens and a new narth—I cannot sever me human heart from mine own land; and sho shall say that those noble countries, esting off all impurity in the first print that awaits them, shall not be our final heaven.

I love to think that it may be so: I love to think that the Lord. In His humanity, looks tenderly upon the mortal soil on which He sojourned in His wondrous life, and that here, perchame, in those very lands, made holy by His grace and power, our final rest shall b fret, Even more than when I tripped, lightly as they;

The innocent brightness of a new-born day
Is lovely yet—
The clouds that gather round the setting

Do take a sober coloring from an eye That hath kept watch o'er man's mortality.'

BOOK II. RESOLUTIONS.

CHAPTER I.

There was a hardness in his check,
There was a hardness in his eye,
Peter Bell.

There was a hardness in his eye.

—Peter Bell.

"I beg you will not misunderstand me, Mrs. Oswald; I vow to you that this girl shall never cross my threshold, and if William persist in his folly he must choose between her and me; for sesuredly he shall not keep his place with both. I tell you her "ather was a fool and a weakling, and you know the injury he did me. My mind is made up; before I receive this girl (I care soithing for her own good qualities—they do to the concern me in the slightest) as my laughter, I will disown my son. If he wants to prolong her poverty, and to make himself a servant all his life, let him persist la his madness; and if you encourage him further in it, the consequences lie with yourselves. I have tolled and labored to enrich him, and if he thwarts me thus, he shall rue it!"

The speaker was a wire, dark man, about

The speaker was a wiry, dark man, about the middle height, with a face in which you could read habitual obstinacy. It had redeeming qualities; you could see how a great enough matter might elevate the constitutional pertinacity into brave determination, and the eyes were intelligent and clear; and the rigid muscles of his mouth were their sternest expression to day, and a clear white and healthy. Its great health and healthy. Its great health and not the remedy. Ask your druggist for SWANNE'S OINTMENT. Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. standing with his back to the fire in a goods'zed, comfortable dining room, the front windows of which looked out upon the Main street of Fendie. The house was with drawn a little from the line of the neighboring buildings, in modest dignity, and bore over its portice and stone pilars the important title "Banky" and the obstinate gentleman in the dining room within was Mr. George Oswald, at that time the sorepresentative of banking interests in the borough of Fendie.

The very emphatic speech which we have already recorded, was addressed to his wife, who sat opposite to him. She was very calmly engazed with her sewing, though her face was sufficiently grave to show that her husband's words were not merely empty breath. When he had concluded, she raised her head.

"I cannot see what necessity there is for making any vows to me, George. If you are determined not to hear what I say, ani what William says about this very sweet and innocent girl, of course you must have your own way, as you always have; but as for your vows—you know that is quite unnecessary."

your own way, as you always have; but as for your vows—you know that is quite unnecessary."

"I know no such thing!" said Mr. Oswald, impericusly. "You fancy I will forget by and by, and that you may renew this subject again; but I protest to you, Jane, that neither your son nor you shall never move me on this point—that—""George," interrupted his wife, "I hear Hope coming down stairs; pray do not let her be a party to this discussion. I am reluctant that she should ever know how you regard the Buchanans, for Hope is inclined to have an opinion of her own, and to express it more freely pernaps than she should at her years. Let us drop this subject, I beg; I promise you I will not renew it."

The cloud passed from the banker's face—his stern mouth relaxed. It was the young yoice, without, singing so gayly as its owner came bounding down stairs, Hame, hame, hame, hit has the she without, singing so gayly as its owner came bounding down stairs, Hame, hame hame! h, it's hame fain wall he—that chased the mist from his face and from his mind. He was kind enough in all his relationships, it somewhat exacting and rigid, but he was indulgent to an extent, which only the stern and vehement nature can reach, of all the whims and caprices of his favorite child.

both he was induigent to an extent, which only the stern and vehement nature can reach, of all the whims and caprices of his favorite child.

Hope Oswald was fourteen, and had been for two or three years at a famous educational establishment in Edinburgh. Her father looked with natural satisfaction on the houses and lands which his industry had acquired, read with satisfaction his own name his in the list of b-nk shareholders in his own private clice, was pleased when he saw "George Oswaid, Eq., of Fendie, figuring in his local newspaper as connected with some county or borough reform, or public good-work; but the banker's eye looked never so proud as when ametropolitan broad-sheet informed him how, at the examination of the famed estab ishment in Edinburgh, "Miss Hope Oswald, Fendie," had carried off prze on prize. The stern man read the half yearly list of school-girl honors with secret exultation. It was a matter of genuine happy pride to him; and Mrs. Oswald smiled which bestelf, as year after year her husband expressed in joyous terms his wonder, that the name of Miss Adeiaide Pendie of Mount Fendie, the daughter of their aristocratic neighbor "up the water" did never by any chance make his appearance among this honored number, while "our Hope" had won almost as many distinctions as there were distinctions to win. But Hope was weary of gaining prizes, and longed exceedingly to return home; so she was granted an interregnum. Six bithe holiday months were to pass before she returned to Edinburgh, and on the same day she had arrived in Fendie.

The age of swkwardness had scarcely commenced with Hope. She had not begun to be sell-conscious, and in consequence escaped the inevitable physical attendants of that unpleasant state. The did not yet think of people seeing her when she danced about through the rooms and passages, and ran races through the garden, and waded secretly in the water; nor of people hearing her, as she went about everywhere singing aloud in the exuberance of her joy. She was only a girl yet;

The Queen's Highway.

It is well reasoned that good roads cheapen transportation, save time, reduce the wear of draught animals and vehicles, and thus lessen the expenses of producer the wear of draught animans and the lessen the expenses of producer and consumer.

There is reason also in the argument that the bad condition of country roads tends to discourage farm life, in that it makes it difficult for the people to visit each other at certain seasons of the year, and interferes with attendance at church and school. The amount of money wasted on highways, in many sections, every year, would go far towards making first-class roads. It is nothing new under the sun when a burdensome tax is expended in making the roads worse than they were.

The art of road making is not acquired in a day. It is one of the oldest and one of the least understood. There have been so many things claiming attention that many have not thought much about the matter. Of late, the inquiry is more than formerly for ways of saving, and among them is seen to be an improved method of dealing with the public road.

A man's wife should always be the same, especially to ber husbard; but if she is weak.

A man's wife should always be the same, especially to her husband; but it she is weak and nervous, and uses Carter's 1ron Pills, she cannot be, for they will make her "teel like a different person," at least so they all say, and their husbands say so, too.

Not to enjoy life, but to employ life, ought to be our aim and aspiration.

Among the pains and aches cured with marvelous rapidity with Dr. Themas Eclectric Oil, is carache. The young are especially subject to it, and the desirability of this Oil as a family remedy is enhanced by the fact that it is admirably adapted not only to the above aliment, but also to the hurts, disorders of the bowels, and affections of the throat, in which the young are specially subject.

Luxury shortens life; comfort prolongs t, especially ease of mind. To fret and soil after luxury, or the means to have it, sthereby a species of suicide.
