DEMONSTRATIONS.

Parts, Jan. 17-Prince Napoleon's house was thronged with visitors up to the time of his arrest. He appeared very much ex. to the prince. The latter immediately cited, and eagerly questioned his visitors as threw up all his public functions, including to the effect of the manifesto. They gave his membership of the council of regency, him the most encouraging account of its his opposition to the temporal power of the reception by the public. "Yes," he said, pope having converted the empress Eugenie, "the die is cast. The moment for action has arrived. I hear I am to be arrested and inveterate enemy. But he speedily regained expelled. I await the officers." In reply the confidence of the emperor. Though he to the emphatic declarations of his partisans that they counted on his decision and firm. they never ceased to regard him in reality ness, he said, "Trust to me. The republic as an imperialist. Prince Napoleon has lived. The people in power have lost has long been nicknamed Plon-Ploa, his all their prestige. The empire alone can ambition as well as his attempt save France and place it again in the first to reconcile imperialistic with extreme rank of the nations." These declarations liberal institutions subjecting him to critiwere frequently repeated and hailed with enthusiasm by the excited Bonapartists.

The partisans of Prince Victor are said to be greatly irritated by Napoleon's conduct. It is stated that the Bonapartist leaders are practically unanimous in ridiculing Napoleon and his manifesto. Prince Victor is serving as a volunteer in the army at Orleans, Amigues, one of the Bonapartist leaders, says that Prince Napoleon has no following two scns, the eldest, Victor, born in 1862, at all. His party consists of a few intimate was declared by will the heir of the late associates. Not a general or regiment in the army would respond to his appeal, and had not the government committed the mistake ef arresting him, in a week the manifesto would have been forgotten. Victor, on the contrary, has a large section of the army devoted to him, ready to act at the proper moment. Amigues declares that Jerome has neither the character nor principles necessary for a successful prethen. Young Victor, his son, is twenty years of age, and serving with the army of that Jerome has neither the character nor principles necessary for a successful pretender. He is, moreover, in poor health, and may die at any moment.

Rouher says that Napoleon took the step without previous consultation with the party, and that only a few personal friends knew of his intention, among whom Rouher was not included. Rouher is convinced that the manifesto will make an excellent impression upon the rural population, which he firmly believes never ceased to be Bonapartist, and since the death of Gambetta he regards the republic as doomed. Rouher says he would not second the prince even if appealed to. He believes there is no breach between Victor and his father. Rouher says the peasantry can muster twenty-eight millions against eight millions in the tewns, "If they hold firm to our cause the republic sooner or later is doomed." Jules Simon does not believe that any imminent danger threatens the republic. He thinks the new elections would now result in a return of a chamber similar to that existing at present. No pretender would have a chance yet, though a couple of years hence, unless the republic ceases its impolitic war against the catholics, a monarchist restoration may be quite possible.

The proofs of the manifesto were handed to Prince Napoleon while he was at the opera, and the final arrangements were then made.

PRINCE NAPOLEON, PLON-PLON. Napoleon the emperor made his younger brother Jerome, king of Westphalia. By his second wife, Catharine of Wurtemburg, King Jerome left two sons the second of whom was Napoleon Joseph Charles Paul, popularly known as Prince Napoleon, born at Trieste in 1822. He was educated partly at Rome, partly at Arenenberg, under his cousin, who subsequently became Napoleon III. His resemblance to the first Napoleon was striking. His uncle of Wurtemberg provided his military education. In 1845 he was allowed to remain in Paris for only tour months. In 1848 he supported the revolution and in 1849 he accepted from Louis Napoleon the post of minister at Madrid. He kept quiet during the coupd'etat of Dec 2, 1851, and on the estab. took his seat in the senate and council of meeting of the National board of trade state as an imperial prince. He was a general of division in the Crimean war but was soon recalled. He was a successful diplomat in several things entrusted to him by Napoleon III. In 1859 he married the Princess Clotilde, daughter of King Victor Emmanuel. He visited America in 1861. In 1863 he spoke in the French senate against the temporal power of the papacy.

At the inauguration of the statue of Napoleon I in Ajaccio in 1865, he made a sensational oration full of democratic sentiments, which proved still less palatable than his previous speeches to the emperor, who was then in Algeria, and from thence addressed an official reprimand who had never been his friend, into his constantly coquetted with the ultra radicals, cism, to which the grotesque contrast between his impetuous demonstrations and placid appearance added a tinge of the ridiculous. In October 1872 he was ordered to leave Paris, and on his resisting he was forcibly expelled. He instituted an action for 200,000 francs damages against the officers who arrested him. He retired to his mansion near Geneva with his wife and MILWAUREE, Jan 17-The work of searching the ruins it is expected will be completed on Saturday. Altogether five bodies were recovered to-day, making a total of forty-three. The last five were all beyond recognition. Twenty-three have been identified. It is supposed that fifteen to twenty are still missing.

Scheller has been secretly removed it is believed to Waukesha jail, owing to the threats of vengeance.

It is suspected that Scheller tried to low up the Newhall house early in the norning a fortnight ago by allowing the morning a fortnight ago by allowing the gas to escape from the chandeliers in the bar-room and leaving one burner lighted. The head porter smelt gas and opened the doors in time to prevent an explosion. The porter says he told Antisdel about it. The latter asked if Porter lit a match. Porter said no, and Antisdel said he did wrong. Scheller was absent from the hotel after that several days pretending he was sick. He said somebody must have had a key to the door and turned on the gas. Scheller and Antisdel were great friends.

Mr Meredith asked what reason there was that the reports, if they existed, should not be distributed during the recess, so that the people might receive the information at the earliest possible moment. He saw nothing to prevent it save custom, and protested against this house aping the red tape forms of the imperial parliament.

Mr Fraser thought that if the resolutions were adopted, and the house had no longer control over the returns, there would be likely to be a certain laxity and carelessness in their preparation. He believed their distribution should be supervised by the house. He did not think the rule should be changed unless it involved any real practical grievance.

The attorney-general said that the information referred to was given to the public as early as possible.

Mr Meredith asked what reason there was that the reports, if they existed, should not be changed unless it involved any real practical grievance.

Mr Morris urged that the public accounts were not brought down to the house early enough to receive that careful consideration they required. He suggested that the period of the financial year should be changed.

On the question of the second reading, On the question of the second reading of the public creameries bill, which was allowed to stand from yesterday, the speaker gave a decision in the point raised by the opposition on the day before, deciding that the second reading was in order.

Mr Broder (Dundas) explained the first method of butter-making to the house, and detailed a number of practical objections to the working of the bill. It was very very necessary, however, that the butter interests of the dominion should be advanced, as oleomargarine and butterins had driven all but the best grades of butter out of the market, and he only hoped the government would prove themselves to be good butter-makers.

The bill was read a second time.

The house went into committee on the attorney-general's bills to authorize towns and villages to provide gas and means of lighting; to authorize the construction of street railways, and providing fer the establishment of public parks in cities and towns. The bills were passed with amendments, and the committee rose.

Mr Meredith asked that in view of the arrangements made by members, the attorney-general should not press the point of a Saturday session this week.

The attorney-general said he would consider the matter.

The house adjourned at 11.30 p. m.

A HANDSOME TESTIMONIAL Of Five Hundred Dollars in Gold to Ald

Yesterday afternoon a number of gentl men well-known in the city met in the parlors of Headquarters to make a presentation to Ald Piper. It was at first intended to give him a testimonial on the occasion of his recent marriage, but it was decided to defer it till yesterday. Mr Josh Beard was voted to the chair and in a few fitting words expressive of the good opinion in which Harry was held by all his friends and of their good wishes for his welfare he handed him a bag containing twenty-five golden eagles—$500—as a substantial evidence of their regard. Harry was struck all in a heap, but he replied appropriately. He said he had done all he could to be obliging to all, and would more than ever strive to be so hereafter. The zoo was his pet scheme, and he was pleased to say it was prospering. Speeches followed from John Cosgrave, C Romain, Mr Roberts, Mr McConnell, etc. Everybody seemed to think that Harry was the best known and most genial man in the city. Beard was voted to the chair and in a few

The bill provides that the title of the new ward shall be St Paul's, and the present reeve and the two deputy-reeves of Yorkville shall be the three aldermen respecting the ward in the council, Mr Bell's bill, with reference to the authorizing of works relative to railway crossings in which Toronto and Parkdale are interested, provides for debentures being issued by the city council and that of Parkdale, not excluding $100,000 in each municipality. The bill provides for the levying of a special rate, and that it will not be accessary to obtain the consent of the rate-payers.

Mr Bell yesterday gave notice of a mocion, doubtless inspired by the late Milwakee horor, relative to the inspection of the presention against fire taken in the different city hotels.

To-night Archbishop Lynch gives his annual dinner to members of the house and others. This, however, will not prevent an evening session, the government being determined to real-hunging up the total prize lists ever offered by the city council and that of Parkdale, not excluding $100,000 in each municipality. It appears that Mr Wm Petley was passing under the gas pipes which were being removed by the workmen when he was instantly felled to the ground, one of the heavy pipes having struck him a severe blow on the head. Fortunately for that gentleman he had on a fur cap at the time of the occurrence, otherwise the injury he sustained might have been serious. As it was he received nothing further than a severe shock.
