an immense profusion of blossoms. They were silent: and though they uttered no sound audible to our ears, our eyes saw indications of an abundant autumnal fruitage. The voiceless blossoms were as full of promise as are the foreshowings of benign prophecy. As the summer months wore away the orchardists talked assuringly of the prospect of an unusually "big crop;" and when the "gathering time" came, the perplexing question arose - " where shall we find a market ?"-Since then there has been a busy time under the fruit-laden trees.
