

Lieutenant C. S. Wilkie, son of Mr. D. R. Wilkie of the Imperial Bank of this city, is a member of the Queen's Own and a graduate in Arts of Trinity. At present he is in his second year at Osgoode Hall. Lieutenant Wilkie was a prominent member of C Company during its early operations, but succumbed to sunstroke a day or two before Cronje's surrender at Paardeburg, and after spending several months in hospital in Africa and England, returned home some time ago. He wanted to return to the front, but was refused permission.

Lieutenant H. Z. C. Cockburn, '91, son of Mr. G. R. R. Cockburn, ex-M.P. for Toronto, is a captain of the Governor-General's Body Guards. He has been with the Royal Canadian Dragoons continuously since their arrival at the Cape, except for two months. His horse has been hit four times in action, but he himself has not been wounded. He was specially commended by General Hutton for his conduct at the crossing of the Riet River, and has won high praise from Colonel Denison. Lieutenant Cockburn is, of course, still at the front.

Gunner Frank Caven Macdonald is a son of the manse, his father being pastor of St. Andrew's, Scarboro. He graduated in Natural Science in 1897 and was in his fourth year in Medicine when he joined the second Canadian contingent with his brother, W. J. Macdonald, who was a fourth year Trinity medical. Both brothers were with C battery in the march to Mafeking, but were left behind south-east of Buluwayo in charge of some very bad fever cases, which they succeeded in curing under very unfavorable conditions. Both brothers have been engaged in ambulance work most of the time since, and are still at the seat of war.

Gunner W. C. Laidlaw was bred in Toronto and graduated at the Toronto Medical School in 1895. He was one of the football lights of his day. When the artillery corps was formed for service in South Africa, he was on the staff of the Orillia Asylum for Idiots, a position he still holds. He went down to Kingston on the chance of finding a place in the battery mobilizing there, and was allowed to fill the gap left by E. G. Rawlinson, the fourth year Trinity medical who was kicked in the face by a horse. Gunner Laidlaw has seen much hard service with his battery, but is still whole in wind and limb. He is not returning home at present.
