

neighbouring francophone countries. Discussions could include issues such as protection of minorities, transborder economic migration, demilitarization, social development, and the small-arms trade. In the long term, those discussions could lead to regional arrangements defined by the participating states.