EXTENDING POSTAL SERVICE. In a message from Mr. Burleson postmaster-general of the United States, read before the Democratic achievement banquet, held at Minot, North Dakota, he outlined the work of the postoffice department during the first year of President Wilson's administration. While much of it referred to special conditions in the United States other sections are of importance to Canada, which with more than equality of area has only ; fraction of the population. Mr. Burleson remarked that the importance of rural mail extension has been greatly enhanced by the establishment of parcel post. In this connection he affirmed that the great future of this service and the probability of employing motor vehicles eventually for transportation of rural routes was the justification for the work done by the department, along with the department of agriculture, for the improvement of roads and the encouragement of the good roads movement.
