She sat back in the small chair upon which she had seated herself on one side, so that she could look unimpededly at the visitor's face, and she was convinced in her girlish soul that she had never before seen a face so sweet, or heard so gentle a voice. It was not that Mrs. Grey had the slightest pretensions to any beauty, but her face shone with a nobility and purity that were an index to her beautiful soul. Round her eyes and mouth there were lines that told of many sorrows, and of a life that had held much care and anxiety, but the lips had set themselves into a curve of tenderness that was not contradicted by the quiet determination and self-control written there as well. And the deep soft eyes seemed to Molly, as she expressed to herself, like something good looking at her, and very often in the course of that afternoon she caught herself wondering why Stella had spoken of her grandmother with the contemptuous indifference bordering on scorn. It was not until after tea was over that the visitor turned directly towards Molly, who, by that time had recovered from her sense of unaccountable shyness, and said in the low voice which she so infinitely attracted the girl:

"So you are only here until Monday? I say, say it's impossible to drag one'sself away from London just now."

"I don't see it's very hard," Molly answered, relaxing into non-grammatical language; "I'd like to stay in the city for weeks and weeks, and pretty well for ever; it's like paradise, ain't it? I ain't never seen the country before, she went on speaking more and more eagerly, and less and less correctly, as she saw the intense sympathy in her listener's face."

"Then I can quite understand your delight," Mrs. Grey said warmly, "and I wish you could spare more time here, perhaps later you will come back?" she glanced interrogatively at Mrs. Bedworth, who responded coldly:

"Our summer plans are still in the air. We may possibly go abroad, or we may make some visits. Stella and I have got many invitations, and no doubt Molly will be included."

Mrs. Bedworth had not only never liked Mrs. Grey, she actually and actively disliked her, and from the first opposed her husband's choice of the gentle little lady as her daughter's godmother. She had an unpleasant conviction that Mrs. Grey's soft eyes possessed singularly penetrating qualities, and that they were painfully cognizant of her small subtleties and petty deceptions.

Perhaps Mrs. Grey was aware of the antipathy felt towards her by Stella's mother; perhaps she even went so far as to return it in a measure, for there could have been no neutral place for the straightforward crystal clear nature of the one woman and the tortuous and uncertain nature of the other, yet the gentle voice was very gentle and friendly as she answered:

"I think Molly, if I may call her that, she smiled a kindly smile towards the girl, "will almost certainly be included in your invitations. But in any case I hope, my dear, you will perhaps come to spend a little time with me, if you would not be dull with one old woman?"

A flush of vivid color ran over Molly's white skin, her eyes shone luminously. "Come and stay with you?" she exclaimed, with a catch in her breath, "the country—and with you?" the faint smile returned to her face.

A BAD COLD SETTLED ON THE LUNGS

All the most serious affections of the throat, the lungs, and the bronchial tubes, are, in the beginning, but coughs and colds, and failure to take hold at once and get rid of them will cause many years of suffering.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup

removes all the lung heaving virtues of the pine tree and will certainly cure all coughs, colds and lung troubles.

Mrs. Jas. McDowell, Langton, Ont., writes: "In November, 1906, I caught a bad cold that settled on my lungs, so I got four bottles of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and used one and a half of them and in that time I was cured. I used the balance of the bottle away for future use. A few days after our eight-month-old baby took the whooping cough."

He was so bad we had to call the family physician, but he said he could do but little. I commenced using the Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and to my great satisfaction the baby was cured. I only used four 25 cent bottles; a small doctor bill.

I believe there is no other remedy for coughs, colds, etc.

Price 25 cents a bottle at all dealers.

GOWN OF CLOTH AND NET COMBINED.

A handsome gown for a matron is shown in the drawing, the model being in black, with loops of black silk cord used over a silk foundation veiled with black mouseline. Bias bands of black broadcloth, the edges left raw and stitched by machine, were used to trim the skirt and the lower part of the corsage. A bias fold of cloth of silver, striped with deep square of the cloth also outlined the

THE NEW ARCHBISHOP; WHAT HE STANDS FOR

(Mail and Empire.)

Much interest has been taken in the election of the new Anglican archbishop. This is not to be wondered at, for the policy of the ruler or rulers of any religious body influences the future of that organization either for evil or for good. In respect to Archbishop Swetman, it is believed that his occupancy of the high office will distinctly tend towards unity within the Anglican communion in Canada. It will help to bring the different shades of opinion more completely into touch and will thus give strength to the church in its work among the people.

ONCE A DIVIDED BODY.

It must not be forgotten that the Church of England has contained, and still contains, many varieties of opinion on matters of policy and of practice. There have arisen under circumstances and conditions that are a part of the history of the Old Land. Many differences are traceable to local sentiment. Thus there are parts of England and Ireland that are exceedingly "low," while elsewhere "high" prevail. The low church was a protest against what was believed in some quarters to be a tendency towards Romanism. The high church was a protest against the low church, and was designated to give life to what in many English parishes was a dead religion. Both shades of thought came to Canada, and were left to work out their own future. Thus it happened that 25 or 30 years ago there was a great deal of friction, and Bishop of Toronto, Dr. Strachan, although originally a Presbyterian, was somewhat "high" in his views.

A "HIGH" CLERGY.

This prelate introduced many of the pioneer clergymen, and these gentlemen were, generally speaking, inclined to be "high." At the same time, the lay fathers of the "low" or Evangelical view, this slighting led to action in the synod, which was established in 1858. There, after an interesting struggle, the lay element secured the right to share in the choice of the past clergyman. This arrangement was to be made by the bishop after consultation with the churchwardens and the lay delegates, who were of equal rank. The low church party still felt that the high church influence was growing, and that Trinity College, which was presided over by one of the ablest of English clergymen, Provost Whitaker, aided in that process.

THE CHURCH ASSOCIATION.

This belief led to the formation of the Church Association, a low church society, in which Hon. Edward Blake and Hon. S. H. Blake took a lively interest. The association established a low church divinity school, now known as Wyldie College, to train for the church clergyman of evangelical views. The then bishop, Dr. Bethune, declined at first to recognize the association.

Both shades of thought united under him, and each agreed to view the other not merely with toleration, but with the warmest feelings. There has been no trouble since. The Anglican Church appears really to have changed its tone. Instead of representing antagonistic views arising elsewhere, it has taken upon itself a character agreeable to its own Canadian people. Dr. Swetman, the Church Association, worked towards a happy solution of the long standing difficulties, and, no doubt, as Archbishop, his influence will be thrown still more strongly in the direction of union.

Have You Got It? THE LOOSE LEAF SYSTEM

General storekeepers and dry goods merchants cannot afford to ignore the use of a simplified system of book-keeping. No business man should attempt to keep over an over without what has come to be known as the loose leaf or continuous ledger system. The man who has not yet introduced this system into his business should do it today.
