FASCINATING MOURNING
FOR FAIR YOUNG WIDOW

For mourning wear is the chic after-noon gown pictured here. It is carried out in black and white crepe and black chiffon with a sash of black moiré silk.

PARIS NOVELTIES IN FEMININE DRESS
(Paris Correspondent, London Mail)

Now that the manufacturers have discovered a method by which breitchswans may be almost perfectly imitated one can speak of it freely. I cannot say that I am personally at all fond of imitations, however, perfect they may be, but breitchswans is such a specially fascinating fur, and at the same time so disconcertingly expensive.

In the more exclusive ateliers you find breitchswan draped and folded and even pleated, you find it combined with elaborate evening gowns; you find it deeply combined with Venetian guipure traced over with metallic threads on afternoon and evening wraps.

A delicious visiting dress has champagne, sole nylon, and breitchswan successfully combined. The striped skirt of champagne is rather full on the hips and cleverly caught in about the feet. The color of the champagne and sole nylon is blue and white, and the large buttons which fasten the quaint cape are in deep blue enamel rimmed with jet. The tunic is bordered with a shaped band of breitchswan, and this border is so shaped that it stands out at the hem in Persian fashion. This tunic is longer at the back than in front, and the waist is cinched by a wide sash of champagne which is tied in a loose bow at the back, the ends being heavily fringed with jet and dark blue beads.

Unlined Vile Sleeves

A curious fact connected with this model is this—the vile sleeves are semi-transparent and unlined, although the gown is intended to be worn at receptions or at smart five o'clock restaurants. The owner of such a dress would naturally come and go in a well-warmed automobile; in such circumstances, the unlined sleeves would cause no inconvenience.

The Turkish veil is one of the novelties of the present season. It is a peculiar little affair, but charming when worn by a young and pretty woman. As a rule the net used for these veils is of the finest order and rather fine; then the chemise or silk dots are placed in a series of lines, very close together, which partly hide the face, up to the eyes; across the eyes and over the forehead the net is quite plain.

These veils are only effective when worn with small, close-fitting hats or toques and they are not for "tout le monde," but on certain women they are absolutely fascinating. I have seen a haven veil made in raven's-wing blue net and also in a bright shade of tete de negre, but on the whole I think fine black flat dotted with chemise, is the most effective.

One notable Parisian milliner is making a specialty of flat net veils dotted with chemise in an extraordinary design which suggests the close-fitting helmet of an aviator. I cannot recommend these eccentric novelties; they may chance to secure a success when exploited by an audaciously pretty girl, but for the average woman they are quite unsuitable.

I have just examined one of the most delightful evening gowns I have ever seen. It was chiefly composed of the new shot and hand-painted chiffon. The model was carried out in three different shades of blue—blue nuit, bleu, Pragonard, and a rich shade of Egyptian blue.

Fashion Which Suggests Trousers

The under-dress was made of the darkest shade and had a narrow pointed train, while the front was mysteriously draped in a fashion which vaguely suggested Turkish trousers.

Then there was a draped tunic in the Egyptian shade, shot with silver and a second tunic, cut on Persian fashion, in bleu Pragonard, shot with metallic shades of turquoise and dull green.

This Persian tunic was bordered with hand-painted designs which resembled an Egyptian frieze. The figures were done in black, white and dull purple, and in the interstices of the scrolls there were touches of silver and of vermilion.

The tunic was bordered with skunk and the waist was confined by a broad, swathed sash of blue-nuit satin.

Over the bust there were little draperies of hand-painted chiffon and glistening silver embroideries, the best neck-wear makers—worth coming a distance for one of these. . . . 50c. Each

ALBERTA MAY GO
INTO TELEGRAPH BUSINESS

Calgary, Alta., Nov. 14.—That it is the intention of the government of Alberta to go into the telegraph business in competition with the companies now operating in this province, is the latest report in well informed circles here. It is said that the government is preparing to make a deal with the Western Union Telegraph Company of the United States whereby that corporation will operate lines in Alberta.

Swindled North Enders

An effort will be made to bring back to St. John a man who gave his name as M. V. Blow, and who posed as a money-lender with great wealth tied up in bonds and other securities, but who left the city very hurriedly on Saturday after swindling different local people out of about $500. The chief losers through his scheme of taking small investments and giving fraudulent checks, are Jacobson & Co., furniture dealers, M. Gordon, a meat dealer, B. Jacobson, shoe dealer, Jacob Myers, where he boarded, and possibly others. He left the Myers house on Saturday with a woman said to be his wife, saying they had rented a house in City Road. This was not true, however, as they left the

Saskatoon's New Hospital

Saskatoon, Sask., Nov. 13.—Messrs. R. O. Mathies, Bishop of Regina, blessed and formally opened St. Paul's new hospital, located adjacent to the old buildings which have filled such an excellent purpose here for many years.

Prominent men from various parts of the province were present at the impressive ceremony, and these men represented every denomination constituted a tribute to the work which the Grey Nuns have done for this community without regard to the creed or nationality of patients or as to whether they were poor or otherwise. The new hospital is splendidly equipped in every department. The surgical wards are provided with the very latest appliances known to medical science.

2,500 Treatment Strikes

Houston, Texas, Nov. 13.—Approximately 2,500 trainmen and engine men on the Atlantic division of the Southern Pacific Railroad, known as the Sunset Lines, went on strike at 1 o'clock to night in accordance with an ultimatum presented to the officials of the railroad yesterday by a committee representing the four union organizations involved. The walk-out comes after more than six months of futile negotiations which sought an amicable adjustment of difficulties between the road and the men.
