

LOVE AND REASON.

There is no summer time so sweet,
When leaves and flowers are both in season;
Then—when of all the world should meet,
O'er every dawn, but Love and Reason!

Love & all his dreams of yesterday,
While reason called about the weather;

The more, in sooth, was fair and bright,
And on they took their way together.

The day in many a gaudy hue,

While Reason, like a Juno, stalked,

Away from her pretty figures three;

A long, long shadow as she walked.

No wonder Love, as on they passed,

So could find that sunny morning chill,

For o'er the shadow Reason cast.

And o'er the boy and cooled him still.

For he had tried his wings to warm,

Or, if it was not so dim,

For all the mighty gigantic form.

Would stalk between the sun and him.

"This must not be," said little Love—
The sun was made for more than you!"

Sounding through a mystic grove,

I bid the nymphs mythic adieu.

Now gently roved the laughing boy—
O'er many a steep, by many a stream;

And drinking bliss in every beam.

From all the gardens, all the bowers,

He called the many sweets they shamed,

And ate the fruits and smelled the flowers.

Till taste was general and odour faded.

But now the sun, in pomp of noon,

Looked blazing o'er the sultry plains,

And the boy grew languid soon,

And never thrall'd through all his veins.

The dearest forsooth his boyish bane,

No more with healthy bloom he smiled—

Oh! where was tranquil Reason now?

To cast her shadow o'er the child?

Beneath a green and aged palm,

Her foot at length shelter'd turning,

He saw the nymph receding calm,

With balm as cool as his was burning.

"Oh! take me to that bosom cool,"

In murmur at her feet he said;

And round his garment's fold,

And flung it round his fevered head.

He felt her bosom 'tig' to touch—

And soon it lulled his pulse to rest;

For ah! the chill was quite too much,

And Love espied on Reason's breast!

Russian Ladies.—The Russian ladies, like the nobles of all Europe, are fond of the toilette of luxury, costly and extravagant; the accomplishments are not so much enchain'd. They have much variety of taste, grace of manner, and display

the most exquisite taste in all pertaining to dress.

The character which captivates, and the amiable quality of the conversation of the public, are not, however, certain proofs of their taste for wealth or private happiness. The domestic vis-ages are little cultivated or little known in Russia.

Marriage is a mere matter of convenience; and as soon as the children of the noble houses have been under the control of the State, the young lady often becomes estranged in their affections.

Each may occupy their separate apartments, and keep up their separate establishment.

The married couple are often separated, and reunited after a long absence.
