ASSERTS HIS BEES CURE RHEUMATISM

One Time Sufferer Makes Living by Marketing Honey—Physicians Experiment with Stings—Gets Stung Daily.

New York, April 16.—The besting cure for rheumatism has been thoroughly examined by medical colleges and endorsed by them as scientific. The essence of the cure lies in the formula which consists in the use of the sting of the bee.

One sting will not cure your rheumatism, neither will two or three, but if you let one bee sting you every day your rheumatism will soon disappear. That's what physicians who are watching an interesting experiment in Cincinnati, Ohio, say.

John Renner, of Cincinnati, long a sufferer from rheumatism, is taking the besting cure. At the time this was written he had already received two weeks of the treatment, about seventeen stings, and he likes it. At first hardly able to hobble about with the aid of a cane, Renner can now walk almost as sprightly as any person. It is estimated by physicians that the poison injected into his system by the stinging bees has made the marked change in his chronic condition.

Only a few cases are on record where bees were used to cure rheumatism. Fred W. Muth became interested in bee culture through having rheumatism. Now he has bees and no rheumatism.

Physicians who are watching this interesting experiment say that the formula which makes the sting of the bee so sharp and painful for the moment is the agent which nullifies the dreadful rheumatic pains. Sharp and painful as the stings are, it is a pain of relief compared to the dull and incessant pain of the rheumatism, declares Renner, the patient.

In the treatment the patient visits the apiary twice each week, taking from three to five stings at each visit. After the system is once inoculated with the formic acid of the bees the person becomes immune to rheumatic attacks.
