Gardeners Are on Lookou For Relices of Elizabethan Period.

sary to the laying out of an old-fashioned Elizabethan "Knott-Garden" Ashfoned Elizabethan "knott-drawed at Now Place, Stratford-on-Avon, the walls of a chamber or receptacle, 10 feet long by six feet broad, have lately been discovered about two and one-half feet below the present level of the ground. That the walls are, partity at any rate, of Shakespeare's time seems evident from the lower part of the brickwork exhibiting the characteristics of Tudor times; that is, bricks of the size, shape and quality of those days, laid in the old English bond of alternate lines of "headers" and "stretchers," with wide mortar joints, declares a writer in The London Times. But dividing the chamber into two is a more modern wall, possibly as recent as the end of the eight teenth century.

It is interesting to note, from the proport of the last annual meeting of Fire chiefs, annual meeting of Fire chiefs, the efforts which are made to evade the provision of the building save these fire chiefs, experts in fire prevention, gave their experiences.

One fire chief said: "Your municipal council will sit for hours and draw up building by-laws, and, in the next 24 hours, when they meet again the by-laws are all cast aside that points, declares a writer in The London Times. There was discovered, however, a few days ago, the complete skeleton of a medium-sized animal, which some imaginative Shakespearean, when it was first uncovered, was disposed to identify as that of the deer said to have been poached by Shakespeare, when a youth, from the neighboring perk of Sir Thomas Luey of Charlecote. The skeleton, however, when brought forth and carefully examined, turned out to be nothing more romantic or interesting than the more romantic or interesting than the bones of a pig, and a late eighteenth orders have been given to the gar deners carefully to examine every bit of soil turned up for the smallest fragments of anything unusual. Shakespeare, we know from many-allusions in his plays, had a thorough know-ledge and experience of the practical ide of gardening-of pruning especial-Should, therefore, any old prur ing knife or other gardening tool of the Elizabethan period be uncarthed we may rest assured it will be trea-

The picturesque celebration arranged by the Maori tribesmen, enemies of the British in the Maori war, in honor of the Prince of Wales on the shores of the Roturus lake on April 29, furnished one of the striking features of the prince's tour. A thousand native warriors, clad only in loin clothes and armed with spears, per-formed war dances while a thousand graceful maidens in brillant costumes did languorous dances to the accom-paniment of soft native music.

The address of welcome to the prince in the quaint Mairo language

"Ye who lie in the dark chambers of death, come forth and hearhen; ye who sleep the long, last sleep, arise and stand forth to give welcome; for lo, the first-born son of the royal lime draws near. The son of our lord is welcome."

tirely of vegetable origin, which is easily moulded and dried.

There is more than one instance in history of vegetable matter being confused with earth and clay. The pulpy parts of various astringent fruits have the peculiar plastic property of clay, and by hardening in the air, after being moulded into pots, they are impervious to water, and have the additional advantage that they can fall to the ground without being broken.

There is a peculiar ware that is made by the Banjaras in the Central Provinces of India from the fruit of the acula. The fruit is collected and dried. It is then boiled in water until quite soft and pounded, the stones removed and the pulp beaten up and worked with the hands into a thick, become, stoky mass. When this is quite ready the manufacturer takes an earthen vessel any shape that pleases him—and covers it all over with a thick layer or at of the pulp. This is then put asfile to set a bit, and when hard rude devices are stamped seamed the neck and shoulders of the
