

No.273.

"I suppose it would be just as logical, however, for a citizen who witnessed in the highway an encounter in which one man had his knife drawn at the throat of another, and who desired to render some assistance to the victim, to ask them to stop and announce what it was they were fighting about, and what the fight started over, before he would decide whether he would lend aid to either one."

4. The resolution itself does not seem to have given rise to much discussion. It has been overshadowed by the lend-lease bill. However, in the congressional and the public discussion of that bill the question of war aims has, of course, come up.

I have the honour to be,
with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient,
humble servant,

M.M. MAHONEY
