

...the young Britisher could not have been, more attentive.
The tall, handsome young Britisher official stepped into the breach, as the judge was speechless.

'My dear young lady,' he said, 'we had no idea of insulting Queen Victoria, for whose lofty virtue we have the most profound respect. Why, we would kill our own President Ben and think nothing of it. I was a trifle careless, I admit, but at the same time there was no intention on my part either to insult or to offend. The young Britisher broke down at this point with tears. She pointed to the door and said:

'The ancient dame entered and heard the noise of the door. The ancient dame held up her hands to her face and shrieked with horror when she heard the noise that had been put upon her gracious lady, Queen Victoria. The judge and the young country official fled the scene, and they heard the other woman saying: 'I did not want to be such a whitehead.'"

Interesting narrative illustrates the sentiment which prevails in Canada. either the banners of any city of the Devoted British Coat of Arms everywhere the coat and arms of the British Empire