

THE "RICHARD THE SECOND" ROSE.

Like the rose above described, the Richard II. Rose is intended as a Souvenir of one of the Shakespearian revivals, which Mr. Charles Kean has so successfully produced.

"Richard II." was unquestionably inferior to none in splendid scenic effect and general magnificence, which characterised its production. Historical incident lent an additional charm to this play, and made it even still more attractive than those of its predecessors, which were partially founded on fiction; indeed "Richard II." as represented at the Princess' Theatre may be said to have afforded a succession of dramatic pictures from one of the most romantic periods of our History.

The "Richard II." Rose contains all the principal scenes of the play, and is accompanied by a short description explanatory of each engraving.

The SOUVENIR of Mr. ALBERT SMITH'S MONT BLANC, NAPLES, POMPEJI and VESUVIUS.

Mr. ALBERT SMITH'S "Mont Blanc" is one of the great sights of London. The hearty good humour with which he relates all the incidents of his journeys, the wonderful delineations of character with which he adorns his descriptions, and the beautiful panoramic pictures with which he illustrates his entertainment, all contribute to render a visit to "Mont Blanc" one of the most delightful modes of spending a leisure evening.

The wonderful success which has attended "Mont Blanc" has induced the publishers of the "Souvenir Roses" to present the public with a Souvenir of Mr. Albert Smith's remarkable achievements.—It contains vignette engravings of all the principal illustrations of the entertainment, and is accompanied by a short explanatory description.

ADLER'S PROGRESSIVE COPY BOOKS.

The Copy Books comprised in this series are twelve in number. Progressiveness is their principal feature; the first book commences with mere straight strokes and the other elementary parts of letters. These, as well as the letters themselves, are first traced in faint dotted lines, thus affording a guide to the inexperienced hand; but subsequently, when the fingers are supposed to have acquired the requisite facility in forming the characters, the dotted out-lines are discontinued, and the writer is left to his own resources, to copy by sight only.

The same method is adopted in the more advanced stages, when the young student has reached the formation of the whole words, and finally the small running hand. In this manner these Copy Books are particularly adapted for the purpose of self-instruction, inasmuch as the traced letters serve as leading-strings, until the hand has acquired the habit of forming the characters correctly.

Price 3s per dozen, or 4d each.

JOSEPH, MYERS, & Co., 144, Leadenhall Street, London.