Tribute From the New York Sun.
 Mr. Goldwin Smith, who recently completed his eightieth year, is undoubtedly entitled to rank among the foremost intellects of his time. As a master of English literary style there are few writers of his generation who can be called his peers.
 For more than fifty years Mr. Goldwin Smith has been engaged in the exercise of the highest and most broadly trained intellectual abilities. A "Double First" at Oxford, he has demonstrated throughout his subsequent life his inherent right to that primacy, by continuous contributions to the literature of his period most deserving of scholarly consideration and most illuminated with philosophical enlightenment. He was the companion, the adviser, the coadjutor of the men who were most powerful in shaping history and directing English thought during the period in the nineteenth century when England rose to its highest intellectual elevation.
 His eightieth birthday comes to Mr. Goldwin Smith in a home far away from the theatre in which his abilities were displayed so impressively during more than a generation of his life after leaving Oxford, but it finds him still assiduous in the studies and clear and philosophical in the interpretation of history, past and current, by which his enduring fame in England and on the Continent was won in his earlier years. He is a resident of Toronto, and is the man of letters of whom the Canada of to-day has most reason to be proud.—New York Sun.

THE TONGUE.

"The boneless tongue," so small and weak, Can crush and kill," declared the Greek.
 "The tongue destroys a greater horde," The Turk asserts, "than does the sword."
 The Persian proverb wisely saith, "A lengthy tongue, an early death."
 Or sometimes takes this form instead: "Don't let your tongue cut off your head."
 Says the Chinese, "outstrips the steed."
 While Arab sage doth impart: "The tongue's great storehouse is the heart."
 From Hebrew with the maxim sprung: "Though feet should slip, ne'er let the tongue."
 The sacred writer crowns the whole: "Who keeps his tongue doth keep his soul."
 —Rev. Philip Burrows Strong.

LIGNITE IN THE NORTH.

Outcrops Found on the Sowska River by Mrs. T. M. Bell.

A letter has been received by Mr. Thos. W. Gibson, Director of the Bureau of Mines, dated at Moose Factory, 7th July, from Mr. J. M. Bell, who is in charge of the expedition sent into northern Ontario to May last in search of workable beds of lignite. Mr. Bell writes: "The work done on the Sowska was most encouraging. By means of the numerous test pits along the bank, the lignite was found to outcrop as a seam 2 feet 6 inches to 5 feet thick, continuously, for over one-quarter of a mile, on both sides of the stream (100 feet wide). By means of drill-holes, etc., the basin was found to have at least the same width, and the coal had not died out at the limiting points, but, instead, retained a fair width, so that the coal bed is probably many times greater than this trial area of one-quarter mile square. This bed is at the lowest appearance of coal on the Sowska, and there are other points at which lignite appears, but at none of these is the quality as good as at the lowest. These beds all occur within a distance of four miles. Besides the Sowska, the beds on the Wabiskagami were examined, but, although many of them are of considerable thickness, none are very pure, and they are not of equal importance with the Sowska, which, I think, is really an important and valuable prospect. On the Wabiskagami we found a thick bed of very fine light-grade clay, at least equal, if not superior, to that which Mr. Borron mentions on the Missanabie.
 "On our way here I stopped for a while and made careful examination of the gypsum beds of the Moose. The gypsum occurs much more extensively than I had previously realized, and is certainly of great value. Careful measurement showed that the beds extend along the north side for two and three-quarter miles, and on the opposite side for two miles and a half, besides which there is a bed half a mile long on the southeast side at three miles below the extremity of the other bed on the same side. The beds are in places at least 16 feet thick, and a careful study of the topography away from the streams shows that they extend back long distances on either side. Of course this gypsum is not of equal importance with the lignite, but is of future value.
 The lignite found by Mr. Bell's party is of a fair quality, but, like the lignite of the district where it is found, unless manufactured into briquettes. This is a feasible plan, however, and the discovery is considered to be one of much importance.

Translations I am the Bird.
 As we listen to the song of the birds in the springtime we very often find ourselves trying to translate their notes into corresponding words and phrases in our own familiar Anglo-Saxon. Perhaps in most cases our imagination leads us to fancy certain resemblances to English words; but, at all events, bird-lovers have always found it difficult to agree in their interpretation of the various songs. In some few cases, however, translations have been so apt that they have at once obtained a general acceptance and have become almost inseparably associated with the name of the bird. Who that thinks of the ovenbird, for example, does not at the same time call to mind the vigorous crescendo, "Teacher, Teacher, Teacher," which so aptly describes his song? The song sparrow will repeat for a whole summer morning long his sole and single article of faith, "Pres, pres, pres-by-ter-ian, ian." As you sit, on an early June morning, under an elm close to the nest of the wood thrush you feel that his message is meant for you and you only. "Dear me!" he says, "Really! Ha, ha, you're a tease! Dear me!" In the meanwhile the little "preacher," the red-eyed vireo, is earnestly exhorting from a tall tree near by, "You see it! You know it! Do you hear it? Do you believe it?" To Thoreau planting corn, the brown thrasher from the tree-top near by, cried "Drop it, drop it! Cover it up, cover it up! Pull it up, pull it up, pull it up!" Translations of a similar nature might be multiplied; but, after all, the comment must be the same in the end—that, however apt the interpretation, it must, in the majority of cases, fail to convey an adequate idea of the quality and character of the bird's song.—Orlando J. Stevenson, St. Thomas, Canada, in Literary World.

Silks Must Not Rustle.
 The silk of the season must not rustle, not even if it be a taffeta; and heroic efforts have been made to keep the inevitable taffetas in the foreground by producing them in a soft variety. Some of the rustles are beautifully favored.

UP TO DATE STYLES.

Costumes For Traveling—Retorts of Fiances and Ruchings.
 At this time of the year one sees all sorts of charming traveling costumes. Scotch plaids are very popular for the purpose. A charming example in green and blue has a skirt which touches the ground all around and is plaited from the hips downward, the top being composed of strappings of the plaid piped with red and trimmed with little buttons to match. The bodice is made bolero, finished with a red turnover collar and cuffs and a red leather waist-band. With this is worn a soft batiste skirt and a perfectly flat hat, the only trimming being a few blue and green wings.
 The French stage is largely responsible for the return to fiances, and ruches are seen on many smart frocks.

LINEN DRESS.

There is no doubt that the bodice or blouse of the 1830 period, as well as the mantle and coat of that era, is in accordance with the ruffled flounced skirt, for the tremendous fullness around the feet necessitates a fair amount around the shoulders.
 Mantles are of really beautiful shapes and lovely models can be picked up at this season at small cost.
 Birds and wings will appear on early fall fashions.
 The illustration shows a linen costume with a long shouldered yoke having strappings of darker linen. The belt and collar are of spotted silk.

A Tartar Proverb.
 A Turko-Tartar proverb throws light on the question of the amount of veracity to be looked for in official documents by orientals. The proverb runs as follows: "He who speaks the truth will be expelled from nine villages."

Comment.
 "I thought I could get along without glasses awhile longer, but I find I can't."
 "Yes? It was an optical illusion."

However numerous may be the opportunities of life they are never discovered by those who keep their eyes shut and their hands idle.—Maxwell's Talmisan.
