ANALYSIS OF MINERAL.

Where could we get a sample of mineral tested, or get an assay to show the value of same, or what it is likely to lead to for mineral? Also, what it is likely to cost to get the sample tested?

CELLAR UNSUITABLE FOR ICE STORAGE.

I have a cellar with stone wall 6 1/2 feet high, with building over wall. The wall is about three feet under ground. Can I convert it into an ice-house and cold-storage. If so, please advise me best way of doing so.

B. G. W.

Ans.—A cellar is not a good place in which to store ice. One of the first essentials of good insulation is dryness, and in a cellar it is difficult to keep the material, whatever it may be, which surrounds the ice, from getting damp. An ice-house above ground can be constructed for what it would cost to properly insulate the cellar. Publications which contain plans and specifications for small cold-storage suitable for farmer's use, may be obtained on application to J. A. Ruddick, Dairy and Cold-storage Commissioner, Ottawa.

Although no official testing has been done, individual records have been kept yearly, and the owners feel confident that were these cows given a fair showing in official work, some very good records would be made. (A bull calf from this cow is to be sold, whose four nearest dams average 84 lbs. milk in 1 day.) Countess Daisy Banington, with a two-year-old record of, milk, 1 day, 43 lbs., and 8,231 lbs. in a season; Louise Houwtje (imp.), milk, 1 day, 62 lbs.; 1 month, 1,582, and 10,763 lbs. in 10 months, milking only twice daily.
