Activity and Freedom of the Mind. BY THE EDITOR.

The night! All nature now from labour rests, Enjoying sweet repose. No more is heard The busy, noisy hum of active life. Creation sleeps __deep slumber wraps the world.

His body, earth-like, lies in sluggish ease. Fot so the mind: Its essence spiritual-God's image - activity its nature --Thought its high, its glorious attribute Affinity it claims to scraphs bright, Who constant stand before the Great I AM. Now bursting all control, it soars on high Leaves the wild eagle in his aerial flight, Tracks, with untiring wing, the starry host In their mighty course; sees far planets roll; Sons distant shine! and on, it wings its way,

Grow dim, and fade like specks on ocean wide Erom the most distant region it had won; And ever active, the great depths profound Of Ocean, with its many caves, explores: Here, it beholds the wonders of the deep, The finny tribes in sportive gambols play-. many a fantastic grotto wild, And lony temples, and domes, and towers. To our world most curious, strike its view. Uprising thence, it claps its wings, and dives Into the lowest bowels of the earth. Nor clay, nor rocks, nor earthy strata deep, It's bold and rapid flight can e'er impede. Through these, like air, it skims its vent'rous

With case and joy pursues its fearless track. One vig'rous bound, the earth is travell'd o'er, Its tossils scann'd, its treasures all unlock'd-Here, by some subterranean stream it sits, There, by some volcano's burning lake, hid From mortal view, till through the apex, flames Burst forth with lurid and alarming glare, It takes its seat unmov'd; with dauntless eye Beholds the mighty magazines of fire Harks to the sound of its artillery, To the bellowing roar of which compar'd. Our thunder is the tone of some mild breeze. Nor rests it here. It lifts its piercing eye, And wide surveys the bright expanse of Heaven, Where God in glory dwells, where pleasures

Eternal, and Angel-spirits strike their barps In lofty notes of praise to Heaven's HIGH KING; And gazing there, entranc'd with holy sights Here let th' Infidel turn his sceptic eye, And, in the mind's activity, proof strong Annahitation dread is not its end. But living, it must live, and never fail Its future years of happiness or woe. Bind the wind with chains, hush its stormy blasts, Stav the fierce lightning in its vivid play-Then may'st thou say to energetic mind.
