ON THE YANKTON RESERVATION.

Birdseye View of the Agency Town Down in a matte pocket lies Greenwood, the agency town of the Yankton reservation. To the north the barren hills rise gradually away to the verge of the reservation, thirty miles away; to the west and east the hills; in front, the brown waters of the Missouri, full banked and powerful of flow. white residences scattered along down the little valley, the Government schools, the denominational schools, the little churches, and the large white house where the agent lives giving some show of architectural importance to the place. They patrol the reservation by their ewn police, a sturdy, been eved lot, and yet not strong enough numerically to cope with the squatters and the boomers. There is no end of interest in watching the Indians come to the post or the agency store to trade. When an Indian wants anything he wants it and it doesn't make any dif-ference what it costs. I imagine some of the people who sell goods to the In-dians are aware of the fact. Thous-ands upon thousands of dollars are paid out, many thousands of them the year through to these Indians, and, if one is to judge by the way the Indians nd their money he must find ample son for seriously considering, What will the Indians do when they have spent all their Governmental money? Any one who takes even a cursory view of the relation between the Indian and the Government must be con-vinced there is something radically wrong in this money giving. While these Indians are not paupers, they are people who, in a very large num-ber of cases, are utterly improvident. ber of cases, are utterly improved to The giving of large sums of money to people of this class is nothing less than a premium on mendicancy.

The man who has lived his life among the mountains may have some considerable idea of grandeur, but he is a blind man to magnificent distances. Let him stand o' night or as twilight deepens and the crescent of the moon is hanging low in the sky, and see nothing before him but the illimitable prairie and nothing above the reddish brown grasses but the sk and its oncoming stars, and no sound but the click of the horses' hoofs or the whir of a big prairie hen's wings or the sharp, ugly metallic rasping of a rattlesnake's warning in the buffalo grass by the wayside—then will he begin to learn something of grandeur of another type. Hour by hour we steer our craft for the north star, steadily shining before us. Far in the distance, miles away, we see the dim glimmer of a light, mayhap a boomer's lantern strung atop his wagon pole to burn the night through, possibly the lamp in the win-dow of some Indian's sod hut. The tired horses begin to show the strain of travel, for they have been covering a sixty-mile course since 8 o'clock in the morning. By my side sits "Al"-Al Lyon. Everybody knows him in this county, for he has driven stage over the whole region roundabout from Yankton to the north of Montana. He tells many a stirring tale of the early days; he has made the long faunt pleasurable by his unaffected manner. A capital story tellar, and the last man in the world to be here to his own story. "Now, sir, you're in the United States once more," he says, as we pass a stone and a furrow. Still we have four miles to cover before we pull up in Armour, the nearest railroad point to the reservation, and it is 9 o'clock when the long drive ends.

When one rides for a hundred miles through South Dakota and passed never a road of it where one may not see the bounding Russian thistle piled up against fences, filling the ditches along the railroad, he begins to realize something of what these farmers are contending with. In many cases farms, by diet of much labor, have been cleured of the posts that the ploughing and the crop planting may proceed but even with all this pains, unless he has a fence that reaches well up to the moon, the farmer is not free from the danger.-Minneapolis Journal.

An Appendicitis Romance. A curious marriage was performed at the Brooklyn Hospital recently. Dr. Charles Seldon, a young physician, was taken to the Lospital to undergo an operation for appendicitis, from which a fatal result was feared by, the surgeons. The doctor was engaged to Miss Gertrude Thwing, the daughter of the well-known American missionary to China. She followed him to the hospital, and then in view of the danger it was decided that the marriage anound precede the operation. Both were suvious to be wed-ded, even if death should at awar pronounce a divorca. So there, at the patient's bed, in presence of the surgeons and with a liberal display of instruments around, the marriage ceremony was performed, and was immediately followed by the operation. Both were successful. Dr. Seldon bore himself well in both cases, and has happily survived both, and will probably, get up from his hospital bed in a few days, made happy by the removement of his ailment and the addition of a

New York. Oct. 26 .- Operating un der the kloak of agents of the republi-can campaign committee, rogues have succeeded in obtaining probably $100, 000 on forged checks in this city and throughout the tate. Their method of operation is shown in the case of H. M. Cook, who is sunder arrest on charges of passing bogus checks bearing the name of M. h. Muhleman, ing the name of M. L. Munichan, treasurer of the Republican National Campaign Committee. Cook, it is alleged, induced Wm. J. Wright to deposit checks purporting to represent $1,100 to his account in the Mt. Morris bank. These all bore Muhleman's

Cook explained that they were con tributions to the Republican fund, and the committee not desiring to let the amount of the subscriptions be generally known, had arranged to cash the checks in different banks.

Treasurer Cornelius N. Bliss, of the national committee, says Cook had no connection with that body. Mr. Biss said Cook was once associated with a subtreasury official, and once had undertaken to organize a political literary bureau, and in that way had secured letters from the members of the committee. On the strength of those letters the man had obtained funds. The sum of $900 had been traced to him, Bliss said. He believes that the real sum obtained by Cook is greater

NEWSPAPER ENGLISH. It is Plain and Orstors Use It to Ad

"No statesman who is worth his salt "No statesman who is worth his salf will be hampered by tradition." said Lord Rosebery in a recent speech. And the saying is a good one in itself. Traditions are useful only when they help. They are a good deal worse than worthless when they hamper. worthless when they hamper.

But Lord Rosebery's saying is chiefly remarkable as an illustration of the fact that he is not hampered by the traditions of stilted English oratory. "Worth his salt," is a breezy colloquialism which expreses in three words which could not have been so well expressed in three sentences of the finest oratorical English.

The fine oratorical English in which our grandfathers delighted seems insuferably stilted to us of this generation. ation. We demand plain English, and the man who wishes to reach the largest number of people will use the plainest of plain English.

The newspapers, which have a hand in nearly everything, have done this. They have shown the advantage of speaking in intelligible language. They are condemned by college professo for using colloquialisms, vulgarisms if you please, such as this with which Lord Rosebery enforces his meaning. But what the newspaper tries to do is to make itself intelligible to the largest number of people in the shortest time and smallest space. Very often fine English is effective, but oftener still a colloquialism will ring the bell where the English of Addison would not strike the outer rim of the target.

The orators are finding this out and conforming to it. Something is lost, perhaps, but more is gained, for it means another step away from the exclusiveness of an intellectual aristocracy; another concession to the masses the despised Toms, Dicks and Harrys, over whose heads the orators of our classical period fired the resonant salvos of their heavy artillery.-New York

The Boll on the Devil's Elbow. One of Florida's wonders is an immense volume of water that boils up in the middle of the St. John's river at a place known as Devil's Elbow, one mile east of Palatka. Although soundings have been made at this place to the depth of 600 feet, no bottom has been found. It is believed to be the outlet of Falling Creek, a considerable stream that sinks into the earth eight miles north of Lake City, in Columbia county. The car-casses of drowned animals have frequently been known to come up in this boil, showing that part of the stream must be above ground. Several of the eldest citizens in the county concur in the story that some forty years ago the carcass of a cow was thrown up by this geyser that bore the mark and brand of Col. Goodbread, a well-known cattle owner of Columbia county, at that time, whose stock used to graze on the banks of Falling Creek.

The bed of this underground stream prisses directly under Palatka at a depth of 205 feet. It is tapped along its course within the city by numerous artesian wells, which throw up a clear, cool stream of water to a height of 33½ feet above the level of the streets. By placing the ear to the pipes of these wells the unmistakable thunders of subterranean cataracts are easily, recognized.—Palatka Advertiser.
