O

LORD ROBERT OPPOSES.

There is good prospect that the Imperial Government will adopt the Deceased Wife's Sister bill, which needs early another day's discussion in the Commons to pass its third reading and be sent to the Lords.

Bit W. Brampton Gurdon has presented a memorial to the Prime Minister on the question signed by more than four hundred members of Parliament.

struction, and that our Parliamentary system will be brought into grave disciplination of the House of Commons may thus be constantly frustrated by the tactics of a very small body of opponents."

The memorial concludes with the assertion that a considerable and well organized majority of the House of Lords is in favor of the bill. In fact, I am told there are several peers in the House of Lords who are waiting at this moment for the passage of the bill in order that they may marry their deceased wife's sister.

Lord Robert Cecil, who has always been one of the strongest opponents of the bill, declares it shall not be carried without an all night sitting, even if he has to do all the talking against it himself. LORD ROBERT CECIL, E.C.

Hodge was running the engine and should know, but the fact sustained the judgment of Mossop when he called to his men, "Tump the fence, boys, she'll hardly get round that curve."

She did not get round that curve.

IN A CHINESE TEMPLE.

of Pandemonium Describ

A Scene of Pandemonium Described by Writer in "Blackwood's."

In the courtyard before the temple the crowd was thicker than ever, but within the three doorways was pandemonium indescribable. Things were seen in glimpses, and then a heave of the crowd or a maxim fusilade of crackers tore away the attention. In the first courtyard by the palm-tree, says a writer in "Blackwood's," a sweating coolie was drawing holy water from the well, and slopping it out to pilgrims gratis for dear life. No time for ritualistic elegancies, which, besides, we don't value a brass cash. . In a cloister by the model junk a middle-aged woman of respectable appearance — some good wife, no doubt—was arguing with .

A Dirty Temple-Blessing over a bamboo joint, full of divining spills. "Ten cents deposit first," he was saying; "just now a box was stolen." The lady (she is plain and anxious looking) compromises by agreeing to say her prayers on the spot. She tells the fellow what it is she desires in two short words, without troubling to lower her voice, and then down on her knees in the thick of us, while we push back to give her room to knock her head clear of our toes. She rattles her box of spills till one flies out. . . Bang, clang, drum, and gong! We are pushed and hustled away by the swaying throng. . . A crowd of women struggling to light incense-sticks at the guttering tapers in a brazen censer as long act trough. . A roar of voices, drifting smoke, and ashes that flutter down. Strange how people know their own business best. The gold faces of the images and their fat red arms, which looked so garish on the day of my peaceful first visit, are now seen through a veil of smoke, effulgent countenances, and roay limbs. Remember, then, that these monstrous Chinese deities were never designed to be walked round, patted, and patronized, but to be gazed up to with the eye of faith amid soul-stirring accompaniments. There is a clear space before the Queen of Heaven, and half a dozen women are kneeling on round mats there. They have all Writer in "Blackwood's."

Black Patches on Their Foreheads from bumping their heads on the ground. The ground may be dirty but it is dry, and the patches are wet and shiny. I think there is something artificial about this. One old lady is setting to work in a most business-like way. As soon as she has said her prayer she kow-tows, and as soon as she has kow-towed she shakes out her tally. Her daughter-in-law standing by picks up each one as it drops and takes it to the table where the clerks are writing. They enter the numbers on a slip of paper according to her directions. "No. 13 for Ah Ling, Elder Brother-in-law please," and so on, right through the family. When the tale is complete she will take her list to the ticket department and exchange it for the oracles. partment and exchange it for oracles.

Color occasionally affects the formation of dew materially, as may be proven by a simple experiment. Place three pieces of board—one white, another green, and another black—in such a position that they may have the sun on them all day, and then leave them exposed to the air all night. A clear, cool night should be chosen for the experiment, for dew rarely forms when it is cloudy. If all the conditions are normal, it will be found in the morning that there is a good deal of dew on the white board much less on the green board; indeed, there may be none at all on the latter. The difference is due to the fact that the three boards absorb the sun's rays unequally, and are therefore of different temperatures at the close of the day. The black board absorbs the most heat, and the white board the least. They all begin to lose their heat as soon as the sun's rays leave them, the white board cooling first, the green board next, and the black board last. As soon as they become cool enough to condense the watery vapor of the air in contact with them, dew will begin to form on them. It may be that the black board will absorb more heat during the day than it can throw off at night; if so, no dew will form on it

Newspapers In China.

Native Chinese papers state that the Chinese press will in future be controlled by the ministry of posts and communications. The following new laws are proposed: The press shall not be permitted to attack either the Government or the Administration. Nothing of the nature of a personal attack shall be published, nor shall any secret document of the Government be inserted. These laws will be put in operation after the advice of the ministers has been secured.

He was a manager of the Pennsylvania hospital and called on Girard for the purpose of raising money for the support of that institution.

"Well, how much do you want, Coates?" asked Girard in his usual brusque tones.

"Tost what the a pleases to the state of the state o

"A bird in the hand is worth twe in the bush, thee knows, Stephen," mildly replied the Quaker. Without another word Girard sat down and wrote him out a second check for $5,000.

His farm on the outskirts of Philadelphia was one of the best in the country, and while living in town he often drove out before breakfast to see that all was going well. He was very exacting with his hired hands and never trusted the management of his farm to any one else, but ran it himself, as he did all his affairs. Arriving one morning a little earlier than usual, he was greatly annoyed at not finding his man at work on a fence that he was building. The man's wife, noticing Girard approaching the house, hurriedly awoke her husband and sent him to his duffes by way of the back door. After visitby way of the back door. After visit-ing the house Girard returned to the feace and, seeing the man at his post, reprimanded him for being late, "I'd been here, sir, but went back for

For the Layette.

In a recent number of the Delineator are given these few very suggestive and helpful hints in the matter of a baby's first wardrobe:

"First, a few of the 'don'ts.'

"Don't buy poor material, for baby's clothes are often solled and often washed and should be strong enough to look well after frequent launderings.

to look well after frequent launderings.

"Don't make elaborate, fussy garments, which make the baby look like an animated pillowsham. They make hard work for the laundress, much trouble for the mother and a great deal of discomfort for the baby.

"Don't make more articles than are neally needed. Baby grows very quickly and needs larger clothes every few months.

"Briefly, then, get good materials, make neat, simple styles and get just the needful quantities. An ample list will include:

"Six night slips, six day slips, one fine robe, six barriecoats (pinning blankets), three flannel skirts, three white skirts, three pairs bootees, thirty-six diapers, three flannel bands, three knit wool shirts with long sleeves and seven bibs."

Washing Lace.
One girl who boards and does not like to send fine pieces of lace to the laundry has solved the problem by washing the pieces in her room and placing them on top of a marble table to dry. It is the same as stretching them on a window pane, and they dry as nicely and look as well as when ironed. The pieces are then placed in a book, a weight put on them, and there they are, tresh and clean, ready for use when wanted.
