For Richer, for Poorer.

BY LULU LINTON.
It was sweeping day, and Mrs. Bernard, warm, tired and discouraged, sank down on the top step of the staircase to rest a moment before attacking the upper rooms. The view of the lower rooms, even from this lofty point of view, was discouraging. With the rugs up and the pieces of furniture pulled away from their accustomed places, the pitiless sunshine showed every crack in the carpet and every soiled spot upon the wall-paper.

Ageless Life.

The body says, "I am thirty."
The body says, "I am old."
The body says, "I am weary."
And last of all, "I am old."
And for its thirst there is water,
And for its ache there is balm,
And for its sleep there is slumber,
But it dies, it dies at last.
But I am a soul, please Heaven,
And though I freeze in my cage,
Or burn in a sleepless fever,
I shall live untroubled of age.

What's the use of trying to clean up, cover up, and pretend any longer?

Mrs. Bernard said bitterly. "I believe that good things, when they do begin to show the effects of long and rough usage, look worse than cheaper ones; but if they hadn't been good to begin with, we've never been able to replace anything," she sighed as she looked at the expensive furniture, now marred and scratched, and at the carpets, still bravely holding to their rich coloring, although worn almost threadbare.

PANDORA RANGE

A convenience much appreciated by every owner of a Pandora is the towel rod attached to the range. As one-third of the rod is made of emery, it makes a splendid knife sharpener, too.

It's always there handy for you. You need waste no time hunting around for the easily misplaced "steel." Bright ideas, eh?

An accurate thermometer is a reliable guide to successful baking, while an inaccurate one's a "cheat" of the worst kind.

If your local dealer does not sell the Pandora, write direct for free booklet.

The letters had miscarried, and had been on the road for some days. The wedding was to take place on Wednesday evening of the next week, and this was Friday. How she would have to hurry to get ready for it! She must begin hurrying right away, and she went tripping up the stairway like a girl.

She saved the letter and invitation for a little surprise at the table.

Her spirits rose as she went about her work that afternoon, and when John Bernard came home that night, tired and discouraged, dreading to meet his wife's reproachful eye, he was surprised to find her talking cheerfully to the children as she set the tea-table with more than usual care. Almost her first words to him were:

"We're going, after all. I've arranged for Aunt Slocum to keep the boys."

He opened his lips to protest, but she interrupted him quickly. "No, you need not lose any time. We can leave here after the factory closes, stay for the wedding and reception, and take the last train back to the city. As to the expense, I'm going to pay that with my birthday money."

John Bernard knew how many times this precious money had already been spent in imagination, and how badly his wife needed it to replenish her scanty wardrobe. His face clouded, as he answered:

"I can't let you take your money to pay my way. If you must go, take part of it to buy something new to wear and the rest for your car fare. I'll stay with the boys."

She answered, "I can't go back there alone! I must go, and you must go with me. I don't care much for the clothes, but O John, I do want to go to the wedding, and you must not spoil all my pleasure!"

The excitement of preparation on the eventful evening brought a color to Mrs. Bernard's cheeks and a light to her eyes that made her look almost youthful; and as she kissed the youngest of her children, she touched them reverently. "Pretty mama! Catching her husband's quick glance, she blushed like a girl."

They arrived early at the church, and saw many old friends ushered into the seats about them. Mrs. Bernard folded her hands with the best grace on top, and wondered if her waist did look very narrow between the shoulders.

But the soft, sweet music was soothing the ache about her heart, and when it pealed out triumphantly, announcing the arrival of the wedding party, she was absorbed in the excitement of the moment.

Then came the clear, solo, instrumental notes, and she caught her breath with deep feeling. It seemed that she was living over again her own wedding night.

The bridal party passed down the aisle. Mrs. Bernard clasped her hands tightly, but they shook with nervousness.
