

myself that she looked queer. I thought the colour of death was in her. I didn't think she was dead when I left her, for what I did could not kill her. When I came back she was on the plashion, the floor, stretched, and there was a little bit of skin off her forehead. She must have tumbled off the chair head foremost and knocked her head against a table that was near. I took her up and rubbed her and shook her, and saw that she was dead, and left her there. Johanna came in then and seen her; she clapped her hands and began to roar and bawl about the kitchen. I sat down in the chair and began to condole with myself for about an hour. I shut the door where she was. I said to myself, if I didn't put Garrett out of the way now he'd certainly do it to me. I couldn't tell whether Johanna heard me say this or not, I couldn't tell whether I said it out loud at all or not, but it occurred to my mind; so I told her to tell me when she'd be calling him to dinner. That's all I told her; and I had not the gun in my hand at that time. I was in the stable at that time. 'Twas about an hour after the death of Mrs. Geehan. I can't recollect whether she let me know afterwards, or whether I saw her going (to call him). At all events I took the gun. 'Twas at the westward end of the house. I put it there about a half an hour before he was killed. I was between two minds whether I had best do it or not. I done it, and it was in spite of me I done it. It was like as if it was to be I should do it. Even when the gun was to my shoulder 'twas like as if 'twas in spite of me it went off. When I was doing it I was sorry for doing it. And still I couldn't help it. As soon as the shot was fired, he bawled and called me my name, and then wheeled and fell face under and with the fall stunned himself. I thought he was dead. I made sure the charge of shot went into him. If I thought he was not dead, I wouldn't meddle with him, but I thought he was dead and to put him out of pain I gave him one blow with the pole of the hatchet and that's all. I wasn't in a passion. I didn't want to mangle or cut him up. I only wanted when I see him struggling to put him out of punishment. Whatever cuts was on the left side they were caused by the fall. I did no more to him. What I told before about the pigs eating off his right ear and the fingers of his right hand is all true. Whatever damage was done on the right side it was by the pigs, any more than the pitchfork in driving away the pig from the dead body. When I went out in the night to take him away to bury him, I saw the pigs and what they were doing. I laid down the light and grabbed the pitchfork and made a clout at the pig. The man was covered with straw. The clout struck the way down through the straw and stuck either in the man or in the beam. I feared it was in the man. I got frightened. Johannah came out. She was so frightened she would not stop in the house. I forced her to come. She was like a little fool, she was so frightened. She didn't know what she was doing. I buried the man in the clay for a few days, until I'd get the woman buried. If I was inclined to do any roguery with the bodies, I had my horse and cart to bury them where they'd be never seen or heard tell of. It took me a whole week to arrange about the funeral and wake of the woman, and to have the prayers of the Church, and the rites of the Church offered up for her soul. I gave away her clothes also for the good of her soul. 'Twas my intention after coming from mass on Sunday to go down to Sears's cousin, John Fitzgerald, and to make the whole case known to him, to have the body taken up and waked; to bring the Crowners then and give myself up. I never dreamed about being hanging. I thought I may be transported. John Drake came in after dinner and remained the evening. This prevented me from going. 'Twas all done out of good nature to bury the woman before she'd be left to the public, when she had no friends of her own. For I know it was, or would be, her last wish not to have any of them around her. I clears Hamilton totally out of the whole of it. She had nothing at all to do whatsoever in it. What she did in it was in spite of her. The four witnesses that swore against her were false. She did not hand me the pitchfork as I stated in the prison here. 'Twas in derision I stated that; spite to her because she said I killed the man. It was not true.

This is my free and voluntary statement and contains the truth.

THE STAR.

HARBOR GRACE, JULY 5, 1872.

The Mails, per "Georgia," English and American, arrived here at 3.30 p. m. to-day—principal news anticipated by telegraph.

CARBONEAR vs. HARBOR GRACE.—An interesting Cricket match was played at Alexandra Park, on Wednesday last, between Eleven of the Alexandras of this town and the same number of the Victorias, of Carbonear. The contest was well sustained throughout, terminating in a victory for the latter, by three runs and two wickets to go down. We are requested to announce that the return match will come off at Carbonear on Wednesday next.

VARIETIES.

A DEATH-BED MARRIAGE.—A few days ago a man named Coleman Robinson, who resided at Brewster Station, Putnam County, was thrown from his carriage, and had one of his legs broken, but was not supposed to have been much injured otherwise. He was engaged to be married to a Miss Little, of Carmel, and sent for her to take care of him while he was confined to the house. She declined unless they were united in marriage. He assented to the proposition, and last Tuesday evening they were joined in wedlock. The next evening he complained of being much worse and in the evening he died. Miss Little was therefore a maid, a bride, and a widow within twenty-four hours. Mr. Robinson left property behind to the amount of a million and a half of dollars.—New York Times.

ATTEMPTED MURDER OF TWO CHILDREN, AND SUICIDE OF THE MOTHER.—About three o'clock on Monday afternoon, a shocking occurrence took place at Blackhill. A woman named Young, the wife of a fitter engaged at Shotley Grove Paper Mills, had left her house in company with her two children, the younger of whom was in a perambulator. On getting to a place called Bridge Hill, the woman took the elder child, a little girl, in the direction of a clump of trees, leaving the baby and the perambulator in the middle of the road. After getting the little girl in the plantation, the mother drew from her pocket a large knife, with which she cut the child's throat. The little girl, however, managed to get away from her mother, and ran in the direction of her home. The woman then cut her own throat, after which she returned to where she had left the baby, which she took into the plantation and then cut its throat also. The cries of the little girl having attracted the attention of two women who were passing along the road, they proceeded with all haste in the direction indicated by the little girl. On reaching the spot, they found the mother with her throat cut from ear to ear, and quite dead, while the baby also had its throat cut, and had one arm round its mother's neck. The injuries to the little girl's throat are not of a serious nature, but the baby is not expected to live. The body of the unfortunate woman was conveyed to an adjoining farm-house, where it now awaits a coroner's enquiry.—Newcastle Chronicle.

MARSHAL VAILLIANT.—The telegraphic news from France announces the death of Marshal Vaillant, one of France's bravest officers. The deceased was born at Dijon in 1790, and was, therefore, at the time of his death 82 years of age. He was educated at the Polytechnic School, after which he entered the army and served in the campaign in Russia. At an early period of the struggle he was taken prisoner, and held captive till the close of the war. He was at Ligny and Waterloo in 1815, at both of which places he distinguished himself. In 1834 he was sent to Africa to superintend the construction of fortifications; and on his return eight years later was similarly engaged at Paris. In the French expedition against Rome he was second in command, and for his distinguished services there was rewarded with a marshal's baton and was created count. He has been more or less actively engaged in French military operations up to the close of Franco-German trouble.

THE FORMATION OF CHARACTER.—If you watch two or three masons at work on a large building, the progress they make seems exceedingly slow, and at a casual glance, the work seems no further advanced at night than in the morning. But watch them day after day, and finally you will see how slowly but surely the building nears completion. So in regard to formation of character. The human mind is like a ponderous machine. A small point of iron at a switch will turn it to right or left—sending it on its proper course or perchance causing it to go over an embankment or into another train, crushing both in shapeless destruction. The sight of some object, or a word spoken or read, will give one's train of thought a new direction, or some direction quite different from what it would otherwise have taken. Upon very small things depends all of one's future course of life. Parents teachers guardians—in fact, everyone—may ponder this.

STRIKES IN AMERICA.—Strikes for the eight hours limit are occurring daily in every district of the United States. The copper miners of Lake Superior to the number of several thousands have struck, and troops have had to be called out to check the outrages on the men who refuse to join the movement. One thousand employes in the manufactures of Hamilton, Ontario, have struck for the nine hour system.

Kentucky locals are done on this wise: Abner Moss, a highly respectable and well-known lunatic, was in town last week.

Latest Despatches.

MONTREAL, June 28.

It is stated that Mr. Howe has sent in his resignation as a member of the Cabinet. Mr. Campbell, Postmaster, will be appointed to a Judgeship; Messrs. McDougall and O'Connor, Dominion Ministers for Ontario; and Hon. James McDonald, of Halifax, for Nova Scotia.

LONDON, 27.

Earl Granville made a lengthy explanation before the House of Lords concerning arbitration negotiations. He announced that the injunction of secrecy had been removed from the doings of the Tribunal, and that on Friday an official declaration of the Board's intentions will be given to the public. He considered the ratification of the withdrawal of indirect claims as certain, and repelled with considerable warmth the assertion of Lord Cairns that, had matters not gone thus smoothly for England at the Tribunal, the Administration would have been in danger. His statements are regarded by the majority of the Lords as highly satisfactory. In the House of Commons, Mr. Gladstone made an explanation and expressly stated that the controversy with regard to indirect claims was ended.

PARIS, 27.

The Garde Republicaine Band, now visiting Boston, has been authorised by President Thiers to visit Chicago.

It is reported that Von Arnim and Thiers will, on Friday, sign the treaty providing for anticipating time for the liberation of French territory from occupation by German troops. The result of the negotiations will be communicated to the Assembly on Monday by the President, who will demand authority to conclude a loan necessary to make payments provided for in the treaty.

LONDON, 28.

The "Times" says the decision of the Tribunal is eminently satisfactory. All Englishmen and Americans ought to be grateful to the arbitrators, who proved themselves true benefactors of both countries. The man who rescued America from discredit is Charles Francis Adams.

The "News" says the result of the indirect claims controversy is a great triumph for the firmness and patience of the British Ministry. Society has now an example for the employment of peaceful tribunals, not to compete with, but to supersede, the work of the sword. Minister Schenck deserves credit for his course during the negotiations between the two Governments.

Other morning papers rejoice over the manner in which the disputes between the two Governments have been settled.

GENEVA, 28.

The Board of Arbitrators met to-day. The next meeting takes place on the 15th July, by which time Lord Tenterden will be able to have the argument on the part of Great Britain put in printed form.

A Paris despatch states that a cabinet crisis is expected shortly. The members of the Right in the Assembly having resolved actively to oppose the Government. McMahon is proposed as successor of Thiers in case the latter resigns. The unsettled state of affairs causes some apprehension.

The resignation of the Captain-General of Cuba has been accepted, and Captain-General Portierio has been recalled.

There has been a frightful earthquake in Japan, by which 500 persons lost their lives.

It lasted a considerable time and the shocks were so severe that the population were unable to walk but crawled about on their hands and knees. The disaster occurred during the evening meal and the smoldering fires ignited the ruins, adding to the consternation.

PARIS, July 1st.

The treaty providing for the evacuation of French territory by the German troops was signed on Saturday night by Von Arnim. It requires the ratification of French and German Governments, within one week after having been signed. A half milliard francs war indemnity is to be paid two months after the ratification treaty. Departments of Marne and Upper Marne are to be evacuated. The second half of this milliard of francs is to be paid 1st March, 1873, and one milliard francs on the 1st March 1874, when the departments of Andenis and Vosges are to be evacuated. Last milliard francs of indemnity with accrued interest thereon are to be paid on 1st March 1875, when departments of Meuse and Fortress of Belfort, are to be evacuated.

In the Assembly to-day, the Minister of Finance will introduce a Bill authorising a new loan to meet requirements of the treaty.

The Arbitration will continue on the San Juan question at Berlin. Bismarck will appoint distinguished international lawyers to decide the question.
