The Great Battle towns of Horlancourt and Chipility, and south of the Somme they have advanced to Proyert, which lies south of Bray. All along a 50 mile front, from the region of Arras to the south of the Aisne, near Noyon, effects which were to have been the final stroke to end the war in victory for the Teutons are only too plainly in evidence in the redevastation of the coutnrysides and the wreck and ruin of the towns, villages and hamlets through which their army have pass-ed. Westward from where the old battleground reared itself, the Ger-mans everywhere have pushed for-ward for material, but with foes be-fore them who fought with the great-est bravery and stubborness, and ced-ed no ground unless recompensed at ed no ground unless recompensed at a usurious rate on men killed, wounded or made prisoners. LONDON, To-day. Last night's news from the front confirms the hopeful impression form-ed early in the day, that the British now appear to be on a line that they are able to hold firmly, at least on the Somme and Ancre rivers. Farther South in Roze.Novon region the slip-Somme and Ancre rivers. Farther South in Roye-Noyon region, the situ-ation is less well defined, but it is stated that both French and British are bringing up reserves there. Cor-respondents also are showing greater confidence that the enemy will be held on this terrain. A German official, of last night was significantly brief and reserved: it reports the crossing of the Ancre, but only refers to Tues-day's events, while British War Offi-cials show that the Germans who crossed the stream, were thrown back to-day in counter attacks. News from the Somme is encouraging. The British have recaptured Merlancourt and Chipiliy and advanced to Proyar.
