

PRINCE ALBERT

the international joy smoke

SAY, you'll have a streak of smokeluck that'll put pep in your smokemotor, all right, if you'll ring in with a jimmy pipe or cigarette papers and nail some Prince Albert for packing!

Just between ourselves, you never will wise-up to high-spot-smoke-joy until you can call a pipe by its first name, then, to hit the peak-of-pleasure you land square on that two-fisted-man-tobacco, Prince Albert!

Well, sir, you'll be so all-fired happy you'll want to get a photograph of yourself breezing up the pike with your smokethrottle wide open! Talk about smoke-sport! Quality makes Prince Albert so appealing all along the smoke line. Men who never before could smoke a pipe and men who've smoked pipes for years all testify to the delight it hands out! P. A. can't bite or parch! Both are cut out by our exclusive patented process!

Right now while the going's good you get out your old jimmy pipe or the papers and land on some P. A. for what ails your particular smokeappetite!

AGAINST RAILROAD ADVERTISING

Billboard and roadside advertising have been under criticism for many years. The weight of adverse criticism has increased and many advertisers have taken note of the trend of popular opinion, while public authorities and all persons interested in the sightliness of highways and the preservation of scenery have taken their stand against these forms of advertising. In Pennsylvania the state highway department is reported to have issued a general order to all of the country road superintendents directing that more than 10,000 miles of state roads "be stripped of advertising signs of every description."—Washington Star.

HIS IMMEDIATE WORRY.

It has been estimated by a British statistician that the British coal supply will give out in about 900 years, the German supply in about 1,400 years and America's store of fuel in about 2,000 years. But that doesn't worry the property owner whose bins are empty and who has just read of a coal shortage threatening us this winter.—New York Sun.

TOO MUCH STATE INTERVENTION.

We do not contend that modern conditions do not require a greater degree of state intervention than was necessary when the nation was young. But there is reason to believe that without realizing the consequences the American people are coming more and more to surrender their individual independence and lean on the State. Nowadays the American, instead of thinking what he can do for himself, thinks first of how he can get the State to do something for him. Consciously or not his ideal of the State that it should be a benevolent despot.—Chicago Tribune.

NO MILITARISM FOR AMERICA.

Every American who thinks anything about the future of his country should fight the plan of Secretary Baker to create a standing army of nearly 600,000 men. We cannot see the need for it if we are to return to the days of sanity before Woodrow Wilson, without a mandate from the people, made us the big policemen for England and autocratic Japan. If the league covenant goes through we can understand the need for such a huge show of force, for we shall have to be in a position to aid Great Britain in its attempt to conquer the world by repressing the aspirations of every small nation which seeks to be delivered from the thraldom of imperialism. Secretary Baker had better wait, however, until the State acts upon the covenant before demanding such a huge increase in our military establishment. We have not yet renounced our American principles by adopting this infamous measure and, please God, we never shall. We believe in some sort of military training for the youth of the nation, but we are strongly against the erection in this country of a military oligarchy which will constitute a standing menace to popular rights.—Charleston American.

QUESTIONS TO BE ANSWERED.

We are importing more than we are exporting, consuming more than we are producing, buying more than we can pay for out of income; and this is what is damaging our credit; it brings us back to the old, old point, we must produce more, or consume less, or both. That is to say, there is no alternative but that we must all work very much harder, or accept the fact that, no matter what wages we receive, we must become very much poorer. But who is to begin working harder? Who is to induce the working man to put more energy into his daily job? Will he do it from patriotism alone, or is his patriotism soured by the over-propriety of the rich? Will he sacrifice himself by working harder than he is compelled to do until the employer has made as full a sacrifice? Who has the most interest in restoring the credit of the country? These are the questions which capitalists as well as workers have got to face, and get no solution of this problem until we get more work done till we work.

Hurd, M. P., of London, in the course of a thoughtful address before the Canadian Club of Montreal this week, Canada's official representation at London has not always received the careful regard it deserves. The post has been considered sometimes as a convenience for political or partisan designs. It is more than that, as Mr. Hurd aptly points out. Its importance is above any but national considerations. In Great Britain to-day Canada's voice is heard and heeded, and the best interest of the Dominion can be served only by standardizing the London representation at a level to be consistently worthy of the country and the opportunity.

A great part of the world looks on Canada through the London window. It is a matter of national concern that the Dominion appears always at her best. This cannot be left to good fortune, as in the past, because it is a first charge upon the intellectual resources of our people.—Montreal Star.

A Great Man Gone.

(From the Westminster Gazette.) The news of the sudden death of General Botha will come as a pang to the whole Empire. There are few men in the world whose death could leave such a gap, or create such obvious difficulties for those who have to take up the work which he leaves unfinished. General Botha was not only a great soldier in his own manner of fighting; he was a great statesman and a most powerful reconciling force in the Empire. His personal story was one of the romances of our history. Less than twenty years ago in arms against ourselves, he became by the force of circumstances and by his own genius the means of developing a great and loyal Colony, whose constancy has been tried by the strongest tests. We can scarcely estimate to-day how much we owe to the man who at the close of the Boer war accepted the consequences in so fine a spirit, and linked his own fortunes and the fortunes of the people he had led so bravely with those of the British Empire. Of General Botha we may say that, once having set his seal to the peace, he grasped the possibilities for South Africa which it opened up. He never allowed himself a regret, but set himself to the uniting of the peoples of South Africa, and the building up there of a noble and proud colony. His qualities were tested in the war by rebellion at home, as well as by the expeditions which conquered the African colonies of Germany. In every aspect of the struggle he bore himself like the great man he was. To-day we can but console ourselves that before his death he had laid deep and strong the foundations upon which will be built the nobler African Empire of the future.

Household Notes.

Put a cupful of seedless raisins into the stewed apples when cooking and see what an improvement it is.

If stout women have the arm-holes of their blouses as small as possible they will not tear out under the arms. A pint jar just for melting chocolate should be kept on hand. Place in hot water and measure out the amount.

Canned huckleberries are as good for pies as fresh ones, but they require a seasoning of salt and black pepper to keep them from being insipid.

A GROWTH IN STATUS.

Canada's new dignity and authority as a national unit in the Empire should be reflected always in her official representation overseas. The people of Great Britain realize Canada's growth out of the colony status, and they are prepared to appreciate the flower of Canadian culture and experience as the voice of the Dominion in the Mother Country.
