The Jezreelites.

London, June 16.—Michigan people may remember the case of Noah Drew, an old farmer, who some six years ago was induced by an English religious charlatan named Peter White to sell a $5,000 farm and give the money to White and journey with his wife to Chatham, in Kent, where he entered the Jezreelite community called the House of the Lord. Then White died, and his widow treated the Drews with great cruelty, and finally drove them out. The aged couple came to London and got a solicitor to take up their case, but nothing could be done. During this period Drew related the whole story of his wrongs. He still had faith in White's mission as a messenger of the Lord, but dolefully confessed "Sometimes when the spirit of the Lord gets a hold of a man, it makes a — fooi of him." The poor old man died a broken-hearted pauper last March, and the story comes up now by the refusal of the local burial board in a Kentish village to allow his widow to erect a tombstone with an inscription denouncing the Jezreelites as imposters. farmer, who some six years ago was induced

A New Departure.

LONDON, June 16.—As a result of the recent crisis in Tory affairs the Ministers have resolved to propose a change of the rules on the standing orders, as they are called in the Commons, which will introduce a novel principle in English Parliamentary procedure. It has been the immemorial law that all unfinished legislation dies with the close of each session. The Government will now offer a resolution giving it the power at the end of the session to hold over such incomplete bills as it may select, taking them any Radicals have been urging for the pasteight years, and it is understood that their present inclination is toward supporting it. Now this very fact makes Tory-Unionist private members nervous, for they forese how greatly such a change would assist a Liberal majority to carry a measure of home rule. Some of them will rebel against it on this ground, but in all probability it will be carried, and thus be a fresh illustration of the curious way in which Tory Ministers of the curious way in which Tory Mini Now this very fact makes Tory-Unionist private members nervous, for they foresee how greatly such a change would assist a Liberal majority to carry a measure of home rule. HALIFAX, June 15.—The steamer Harlöw, which was ordered at Bay St. George, Nfld., not to land any of her cargo there, arrived back here to-day. Captain Farquhar reports that at Bay St. George, the Collector of Customs handed him a written notice to the effect that he would not be permitted to land any goods consigned to people there, on the ground that the people refused to pay customs duties to the Newfoundland Government. Capt. Farquhar says there was no excitement prevalent, but the people were determined not to pay duties on importations. The Harlow consequently continued her voyage up to Newfoundland, getting as far north as Flower's Cove, where the people were found to be in a destitute and deplorable condition for want of food.
