Rome, Jan. 29.—Premier Mussolini has virtually been invited by Senator Borah to call a world economic conference. Before deciding what action to take, Mussolini is awaiting the reaction of France, Great Britain and Belgium to Borah's proposal. The invitation came in the form of a statement given to the press at Washington, commenting on the urgent need for a strong leader to point the way to a solution of present international problems and declaring that public opinion would rally in support of movement for a world economic conference if a forceful figure like Mussolini would take the initiative.

The premier read Senator Borah's statement and personally gave permission for it to be circulated. Asked whether he would take the lead, as suggested, he refused to comment, evidently waiting to see how public opinion in France, Britain and Belgium receives the suggestion. All the newspapers in Rome and the leading cities of Italy reproduced Borah's statement, which said in part:

"There is a very widespread, strong public sentiment in this country favoring an economic conference, but I am of the opinion that our government feels that the initiative should come from a European power. If a statesman of Premier Mussolini's force and compelling leadership should lead in such a movement, I venture the opinion the step would be backed in a marked degree by the people of the United States and all countries. Public opinion should force the governments to act and stay, if possible, the disastrous consequences now impending."

The fight for legislation to permit elective police commissions continues with unabated energy.

United action will be forthcoming as speedily as possible, civic authorities assured today, in order that the necessary appeal be made to the Ontario Legislature before the present session terminates.

Other municipalities have long since expressed entire favor with the proposal that the police boards, as public spending bodies, be selected by the popular vote of the ratepayers who provide the funds. St. Thomas is another of these cities, and the appeal from that center to the council of 1922 was filed for reference, action being taken at the time.

One remark from Mayor Wenige leaves much for the imagination. "It is just about twenty years," he commented, "since Sir Adam Beck was mayor, and any notable changes were instituted."

"What is lacking at the hospital?" questioned The Advertiser. His worship contends that there are many defects that can be remedied, and that he purposes submitting his suggestions at the next regular session of the hospital trust. He maintains that in the city hospital, as in all public institutions, businesslike methods should prevail and even the most casual observer would assume without fear of contradiction that he is not at all satisfied with conditions as he finds them to date.

Mayor Wenige outlined one or two changes of a sweeping nature, which are not given publicity at this moment for obvious reasons, but the indications are that the entire problem is due for an exhaustive consideration.

It is common knowledge that certain members of the city council addressed a letter to the mayor last Saturday night, 26 hours before any one else realized that the missing man was in London, appears on the section page of this edition.

Characterizing it as "a ship without a rudder," Mayor Wenige intimated to The Advertiser this afternoon that a "shake-up" in the administration of Victoria Hospital was being considered.

At a meeting of the house committee of that institution yesterday afternoon, the mayor was seeking much information and if all reports are founded upon fact, the session was interesting. His worship had many suggestions to offer.

Mayor Wenige, he acknowledged that he did not know, but declined to discuss the question in any detail. He has completed his inquiries, he explained.

He was arrested five yards from the king. Police were uncertain whether he had intended to assault the royal couple. Scotland Yard agents believe the man was irresponsible and will have him mentally examined.

The king and queen were not alarmed. Entering their motor, they were driven away while the police combles the crowd for the assassin. Their majesties proceeded to Buckingham Palace. The ex-soldier had no other weapon than his crutch, which he waved in the air as he dashed through the crowd yelling.

As the king and queen entered their automobile and drove away, the crowd cheered.

Authorities believe the ex-soldier may be suffering from shell shock.

Word was received by the London postoffice officials this morning that Mr. C. Hiscott has been promoted from postman to senior postman.
