Let us ride on," was Olive's only answer, given hurriedly, almost nervously. There was no smile on her face, and a sighescaped her as ashe drew the smalle-rein through her fingers with a jerk that started her horse into a trot. But Greville Estcourt was in earnest. He leaned across and laid a firm hand on the slender fingers that closed with involuntary tightness on the whip.

"I want an answer," he urged. "Shall it be yes, it no? For the love of Heaven, Olive, do not play with me."

Her eyes turned slowly, reluctantly to his, and there rested thoughtfully; no charming confusion, no delicious shame of leve was in them. For the space of half a minute the two looked at e ch of their thus; their horses had drop,ed into a walk gain.
