and signed by any scrawl which the writer might choose to affix, and call it the signature of a physician. Our apothecary that night was illogical and dangerous to the community, not by instinct or by choice, but by the virtue of the laws of his State—by the laws, as it happened in the case I have in mind, of the noble old Commonwealth of Massachusetts!

"PORTER!" howled Tompkins, poking his head out between the curtains and arousing everybody in the car, "is this a sleeper or a refrigerator car? Why in thunder don't you turn on the steam a morning like this?"

"Steam's all shut off, sah," replied the porter, apologetically. "We're six hours late, and they're using all the steam in the engine."
