

CHICAGO MARKET

CHICAGO MARKET—March 15, 1899.

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

PROFESSIONAL MARKET—TRADERS SCALPING—NO NEW FEATURES:

Chicago, March 15.

There was a slight advance in the English and Continental cables for wheat this morning, and the Chicago market opened in consequence steady, without creating any great change. The undertone still continues weak, but the bears are timid of selling short to any greater extent at the present figures.

Prime on the crops has the following:

"So far as spring seeding is concerned, I do not think we are any nearer to what we were ten days ago. The exceedingly hard frost, the lowest on record, has frozen the ground to an unusual depth. This is always considered as an excellent omen in the spring wheat areas for a good crop season.

"The first ten days of March have proved the most trying that the winter wheat has experienced in its whole history, not so much on account of cold weather, but the severe freezing or thawing conditions we have experienced daily since the beginning of the month.

"Still, we have had very little weather mild enough to start the wheat growing. I am looking for a very radical change in the general conditions in the winter wheat belt during the next ten days."
