

Canadian food imports to Hong Kong on the rise, but there's plenty of room to grow

BY MARK EVANS

If you've ever had a craving for a Molson Golden, an Atlantic lobster, British Columbian salmon or Canadian maple syrup, it is likely that with some determination and a little luck you will find it somewhere in Hong Kong.

Retail outlets such as Dah Chong Hong, Seibu, Park'N Shop and USA & Co are stocking an increasing number of Canadian products from well-known producers such as McCain's and Canada Packers.
