She had spoken with an angry rapidity that for the moment confounded the stranger; but at this point he lift-ed himself with an insolent air and said: "The goods be bought and paid for, madam; and, in faith, I will not buy them back again."

'In faith, then, I will send for Sir Thomas Swaffham. A magistrate is he, and Capt. Hyde's friend. Not one penny of my money shall you have; for, indeed, your goods I will not

She spoke without passion and without hurry or alarm; but there was no mistaking the purpose in her white, resolute face and fearless attitude. And the peddler took in the situation very quickly, for the dog was already watching him with eyes of fiery suspicion; and an occasional deep growl was either a note of warning to his mistress or of defiance to the intruder. With an evil glance at the beautiful, disdainful woman standing over him. Katherine and the dog so closely following that the man, stooping under his heavy Burden, heard her light footsteps and the mastiff's heavy breathing close at his heels, until he passed the large gates and found himself on the dark fen, with just half an hour to get clear of a precinct he had made so dangerous to himself.

For when he remembered Katherine's face he muttered: "There isn't a mossel o' doubt but what she'll hev the brutes turned loose! Dash it! Women do beat all! But I do hev one bit o' comfort; high-to-instep as she is, she's heving a bad time of it, now, by herself. I do think that, for sure!" and the reflection gave him some gratification as he cautiously felt his steps forward with his strong staff.

CHAPTER XIV.

In some respects the peddler's anticipations were correct. Katherine had "a bad time by herself" that night. For evil has this woeful prerogativeit can wound the good and the innocent, it can make wretched without provocation and without desert. But hatever her suffering it was altogether her own. She made no complaint, and she offered no explanation of her singular conduct. Her household, however, had learned to trust her, and the men and women servants. talked over the circumstance, and found its very mystery a greater charm than any possible certainty, however terrible, could have given in a low voice, and the company looked at each other, and nodded confidentially. For the captain was a person of great and mysterious import-ance in the house. All that was done was in obedience to some order re-ceived from him. Katherine quoted him continually, granted every favor in his name, made him the authority in his name, made him the authority for every change necessary. His visits were times of holiday, when discipline was relaxed, and the methodical economy of life at the Manor House changed into festival. And Hyde had precisely that dashing manner, that mixture of frankness and authority, which dependents admire. The one place in dependents admire. The one place in the whole world where nobody would have believed wrong of Hyde was in Hyde's own home. And yet Katherine, in the secrecy of her chamber, felt her heart quake. She had refused to think of the circumstance until after she had made a pretense of eating her supper, and had seen little Joris asleep, and dis-missed Lettice, with all her accusturned and faced the tomed deliberation and order. But, "Your scarf take. I oh! how gratefully she turned the key by husband you have been talking— in her heart, and gave an air of sormean, lying! You know that this is rowful purpose to her heart and attitude. At that hour she was singularly like Joris Van Heemskirk; and anyone familiar with the Councilor would have known Katherine to be his

There had been a time when her husband's constant talk of Lady Suffolk had pained her; and when she had been a little jealous of the ap-parent familiarity which existed in ir relations with each other, Hyde had laughed at her fears, and she had taken a pride in putting his word above all her suspicions. She had seen him receive letters which she knew to be from Lady Suffolk. She had seen him read and destroy them without remark. She was aware that many a with those professionals who cart pack, and then ostentatiously count-ed back the money Katherine had him to Hyde. But it was in accord given him. She examined every coin, with the integrity of her own nature time she accepted as a final settlement gold lay in it until morning," and, of all doubts. And if she had needed furning to the peddler, "your cap take further evidence she had found it in his affectionate and constant regard "Surely, madam, you be not so cruel as to turn me on the fens, and it a dark them between the first and in his love for his child and his home.

And the interest evidently taken by a commod to just a second to just a second to inform the fens, and it as the first and in his home.

It was also a part of Katherine's and how the road do lay for the next house I know not."

"The road to my house you could husband was surrounded. She underfind; well then you could husband was surrounded. She underticable to the course of the life by which her husband was surrounded. She underticable to the course of the life by the farmer's argument. The departments were well filled, except insuspicion. Hyde had told her that there were necessarily events in his these to furnish a good programme daily experience of which it was bet-er for her to be ignorant. "They be-long to it, as my uniform does," he said: "they are a part of its appearance, but they never touch my feelings, and they never do you a mo-ment's wrong, Katherine." This explanation it had been the duty both of love and of wisdom to accept; and asked for no conviction beyond it.

And now she was told that for years he had been the lover of another woman; that her own existence was doubted or denied; that, if it were admitted, it was with a supposition which affected both her own good name and the rights of her child. In these days America was at the ends of the earth. A war with it was imminent. The colonies might be conquered. She knew nothing of international rights, nor what changes such a condition might render possible. Hyde was the probable representative of an ancient noble English family, and its influence was great—if he really wished to annul their marriage, perhaps it was in his power to do so. She knew well how greedy rank was of rank and riches, and she could understand that there might be some powerful family

> She was no craven, and she faced the position in all its cruel bearings. She asked herself if, even for the sake of on suffrance, or by the tie of rights which she would have to legally enforce; and then she lifted the candle and passed softly into his room to look at him. Though physically like the large, fair, handsome Van Heemskirks, little Joris had certain tricks of expression, certain movements and at-titudes which were the very reflection of his father's-the same smile, the same droop of the hair on the fore head, the same careless toss of the arm upward in sleep. Delaware's Fall Show One of the Best Ever Held.

Splendid Array of Exhibits in All Departments.

A pleasant surprise awaited the good people of Delaware yesterday morning when, instead of the looked-for customary rain that has been playing havoc with the fall fairs' finances this season, a bright, warm sun smiled upon the efforts of the directors to give the best show ever held in the village. And how the crowd did pour in! From early morning rigs came in from the east and west in unbroken squadrons, until the street around the hotel was completely blocked, the place resembling London market on a busy Saturday before noon had arrived. An Advertiser man was talking to several farmers about the reported decline of the fall exhibitions, when a sturdy yeoman, whose pet hobby is attending these shows, joined the group, and after patiently listening to reasons why the shows should be abolished, said: "Does this crowd look as though the Delaware show was or the decline? Why, men, I tell you, this is the best in our experience. Exhibits are more numerous than for years past, the quality of them shows that farmers take pride in raising stuff to place on exhibition, not for the value of the prize, but for the honor attached to obtaining it. And every time we have good weather, the crowd seems to increase yearly. Do I think our efforts should be centered in making one big fair in London? Why, men, the average farmer has little show in London. How can we expect to successfully compete in our small way their exhibits from place to place, winning awards every time? Besides, the average farmer can't afford the where we farmers can obtain a show,

Host Jarvis had a very busy day. The small boy was deprived of one of his chief amusements in other places. He could not steal into the grounds. No admission was charged.
