The opening of the church of St. Alban-the-Martyr overlooking the St. John river at Day's Landing, took place on Wednesday. The service was conducted by the rector, Rev. Craig W. Nichols, assisted by Rev. R. T. McKim, who has been appointed to that part of Westfield parish. The boys of the W. M. O. I., in charge of W. Pearce, were present. Miss Edith Chase was organist.

Frederick Rose, aged 35 years, was arrested on Saturday night on suspicion of breaking and entering the warehouse of Lilly & Son, Elm street. He was arrested by Policemen Briggs and Hamm in the warehouse, and it is alleged that he was arranging things to make a departure. He was brought to the North End station and later removed to Central.

ENLIGHTENED
"Why is it that all these young men in the office seems to be doing better than any other fellows? You see, they are not doing any better than you or I." They only dress better. "Well, how can they afford to dress better than I?" That's easily explained. They get their suits and only pay $1 a week for them.—At Braggs' Ladies' and Gent's Clothings, 187-189 Union street.

North End merchants and residents have a grievance in that no provision is being made by the city for the removal of waste paper which can no longer be used under civic ordinance be thrown on the public dumps.

ONE MAN OWNS WHOLE TOWN OF HUDDERSFIELD

(London Tit-Bits.)
"No ye that we, in consideration of the sum of £965 7s. 6d." (value about £9,650 7s. 6d today) "have granted to William Ramsden, his heirs and assigns, all that our manor of Huddersfield, etc., and all our capital message or tenement, all Bay Hall, in Huddersfield, aforesaid."

In these terms Queen Elizabeth in 1599 conveyed to William Ramsden, an ancestor of Sir John William Ramsden, the greatest territorial magnate in the baronetage, who lately died, the land on which the busy manufacturing town of Huddersfield now stands.

It was a splendid investment for the Ramsden family, but a bad bargain for the crown, for the charter has for three centuries past made Huddersfield the property of the Ramsden family. Two years ago it was stated that the yearly ground rent of the estate amounted to £180,000. The property, however, was apparently subject to heavy charges.

This charter, however, was not the only royal favor bestowed upon the Ramsden family, in spite of the fact that John Ramsden, who succeeded the William Ramsden to whom the charter was granted, was committed to the Tower for high treason for taking up arms for Charles I. for the grandson of the latter was created a baronet by Charles II, and succeeded also by royal favor in adding enormously to the wealth of the family. The Merry Monarch in 1672 gave Sir John a charter to hold a market every Thursday in the town of Huddersfield, and the late baronet ultimately sold these market rights, with the site, to the corporation for £48,000.

Of course, the Ramsden family was only one of many families which at that time acquired riches and acres by royal favor. These were the days when kings and queens granted land and property to their favorites in the most easy-going and liberal manner, without any thought of the future rights of the state.

Altogether the Ramsden estates in Huddersfield and district comprise 4,800 acres, but, including other lands belonging to the family, the whole amounts to 150,000 acres.

It was not, however, until 1880 that the late Sir John Ramsden became absolutely sole lord of Huddersfield, for there was a small plot of land in the centre of the town which did not belong to the Ramsden family. The last owners of the little plot was the late Thomas Frith, a Quaker of Brighton. Frith could not be induced to part with this little plot of land, although he was offered a price by Sir John Ramsden which would have sufficed to pave the land with guineas. The old Quaker, however, refused to accept, saying, "I will not if thou set them edgeways. Nay, Sir John, Huddersfield will belong to thee and me still."

When Mr. Frith died, in 1880, the trustees conveyed the land to Sir John Ramsden, and he thus became sole owner of Huddersfield.

SAVE CARLYLE'S BIRTHPLACE.
$550 to Purchase Adjoining Dwelling Has Been Raised.

There will be gratification among Carlyles all the world over that the historian's birthplace is henceforth secure from molestation. The committee of management, concerned, announced that the purchase of the adjoining house is complete and that there is no further anxiety concerning the building.

Every visitor to the little Dunfriesshire village of Ecclefechan knows "the Arched House" as it is called; indeed this humble building is the only reason that can draw the tourist to a border hamlet which has few attractions.

Carlyle himself says harsh things concerning it in letters to his brother John, and was probably writing more of the influence of the memories of his struggling boyhood than of any real contempt for the place itself.

Ecclefechan, like its neighbor, Lockbovie, probably grew out of an ancient house of call on the high road that goes north from Carlisle and over the Lanarkshire Hills to Glasgow.

The historian's ancestors may have proceeded from either side the border, and they certainly included, as he tells us himself, a reiver or thief, who was hanged for sheep stealing. But no man could have been more law abiding than James Carlyle, the mason, who built this cottage in which his famous son was born.

The house or pair of houses, joined by an arch big enough to drive a wagon through, is just a two-story structure of lowland freestone, covered with lime-wash; squared as to windows and doors and firmly slated as to the roof.

It stands on the west side of the broad village street, not far from the bridge-half-stream, half-ditch—that distinguishes Ecclefechan from its rivals, and not far from the smart church which guards the little yard where Carlyle lies among his kindred. His wife is gathered to her fathers at Huddington.

It is only within the last year that the "south end of the Arched House"—that is to say, the adjacent dwelling—came into the market, and the sum necessary for its purchase, $650, was provided.—New York Sun.

With an open mind and no prejudices about shoes—we'd like you to compare Invictus Oxfords with any and all others—at any price.

You'll find cheaper shoes lack many of the qualities that are necessary to the Invictus standard. The leather, the workmanship, the lasting, the little touches that the discriminating eye recognizes at a glance are not the same.

So you must pay the Invictus price for shoes as good as Invictus.

But you need pay no more. For there's nothing that a custom shoe-maker can put into his finest and most expensive product that isn't right there in the very first pair of Invictus Shoes you try on.

MORNING NEWS OVER THE WIRE

Mary March, aged 22 years, while in company with her fiancé, on Saturday evening in Toronto, was struck by an automobile and killed. The car was said to have been driven by J. B. Whaley, who, half an hour later, was called upon to serve on the jury inquiring into her death and appointed its foreman. He is now held on a charge of manslaughter. A wire has been received at Ottawa from Vancouver asking for troops, as it is feared that the Hindus prevented from landing and their fellow countrymen on shore may unite in a revolt. An attempt to land the 400 Hindus from the steamer may be made.

Amongst the matriculants at St. Francis Xavier College, Antigonish, this week are E. Quinn, St. John M. McEnnis, St. Andrews, and Cameron Murray, Richibucto.

Mary Morgan, a young woman employed in the Depot House at Sussex, had an almost miraculous escape from death on Saturday afternoon. She was struck by the west-bound C. P. R. express and buried through the air about twenty feet but escaped with a cut foot and some severe bruises.
